Railroad shares were subjected to heavy selling. Union Pacific, Atchison, New York Central, Delaware & Hudson and Southern Pacific lost from fractions to more than a point.

CANDIDATES START SCRAMBLE FOR LOUISIANA ELECTIVE JOBS

Noe and Martin, Long's Aides, Surprise Governor Allen By Candidacies

BATON ROUGE, La., Sept. 20—Wild confusion held sway today in the political empire of the late Sen. Huey P. Long as eager hands reached to grasp the scepter of the fallen leader.

The startling announcement by Lieut. Gov. James A. Noe and Wade O. Martin, chairman of the public service commission, that they are candidates for governor and senator, respectively, has served only to increase the speculation as to what is really going on behind the scenes in the Long camp.

The announcement by these two "wheel horses" of the organization burst on the political horizon yesterday, apparently leaving Gov. O. K. Allen, titular head of the Long forces, in a quandary.

Part of Allen Plan

At first the move was considered throughout the state as a sensational "coup" to force the hand of Gov. Allen, but today rumors were afoot that it was all a part of a well-conceived plan by Gov. Allen and his chief lieutenant.

Possible candidates aplenty for these two offices have arisen within the organization since the assassin's bullet cut down Sen. Long less than two weeks ago, but no candidates would be named until a caucus of the Long forces could be held, Gov. Allen had said.

One of the chief contenders for the throne has been Allen Ellender of Houma, speaker of the house, and a growing support for either Ellender or Earl Long, brother of Sen. Long, was credited in some quarters with being the cause of the "surprise coup" by Noe and Martin.

Neither Ellender nor Earl Long was acceptable to Gov. Allen just at this time, the reports declared, and the Noe-Martin announcement was hit upon as a means of forcing the organization to keep in line.

Could Cause Trouble

Failure of an administration caucus to support Noe and Martin now might spell disaster to the organization, especially in view of the fact both candidates went forth with the blessings of Associate Justice John B. Fournet and the Rev. Gerald K. Smith, who has assumed command of Sen. Long's "Share Our Wealth" clubs.

Nevertheless, the announcement was signal for a sudden conference in the governor's office. Both Noe and Martin attended, but what went on behind the closed doors remained unrevealed.

"The announcement came as a surprise to me," Gov. Allen stated later. He refused to comment further on the situation, other than to say an administration slate of candidates is being prepared. Unconfirmed reports were that it probably would be released within two or three days.

M. E. Church to Observe Conference Year's End

Rev. Herman A. Sayre of the Methodist Episcopal church today announced programs for Sunday morning and evening in observance of the last day of the conference year.

The morning program will be climaxed by the pastor's sermon: "The Abundant Life", which will be preceded by the regular service. The choir Sunday morning will be augmented by Miss Betty Scothorn as violin soloist.

She will play "A Log Cabin" as an offertory. Mr. Elzie Radcliffe will sing the solo "Sundown", with the choir anthem being "O Love That Will Not Let Me Go".

The evening program will consist nearly entirely of music. It starts at 7:30 o'clock.

The prelude will include violin, piano and organ with Dwight Weiler, Mrs. Ione H. Reicheldorfer and Hunter Chambers, respectively, playing.

The choir will sing four anthems, "Trust in Him" by Hambien, "Savior When Night Involves the Sky" by Shelley with the solo part by Elzie Radcliffe, "Repent Ye" by Scott and Deis, and "Hear My Prayer" by James.

Miss Marjorie Priest, new public school music instructor, will sing the solo: "The Penitent". Miss Priest is a contralto.

"Remember Now Thy Creator" will be sung by the quartet, Mrs. Frank Kline Jr., Mrs. J. P. Moffit, Glen Geib, and John Hegele.

Remarks during the program will be made by Clarence Barnhart, Sunday school superintendent; Rev. C. L. Thomas, retired, and Rev. Sayre who will talk on "Retrospection" covering his two years as the local pastor.

Both services are expected to be well-attended.

CONVERTED HEBREW TALKS HERE SUNDAY

The First United Brethren church will have an unusual program Sunday night when the Rev. Oscar Wago will tell the thrilling story of his conversion. Rev. Wago is a converted Hebrew and ordained to the Christian ministry.

Born in Europe, he was educated at the universities of Vienna, Paris, Berlin and Zurich and served as a major during the World War in the Imperial German army. Rev. Wago is by profession an automobile and airoplane designer but is now connected with the American Board of Missions to the Jews.

The program promises to be of interest to both Jew and Gentile, because Rev. Wago is an authority on Jewish life and tradition, having been brought up in a very orthodox Jewish family and receiving his religious education from noted Rabbis in Europe.

The Jewish question is a very vital one today and having lived in almost every country of Europe, Rev. Wago's message will be timely and interesting. Rev. T. C. Harper, the pastor, extends a cordial invitation and welcome to all who may desire to attend.

Mrs. Thurn Discusses Diets for Reducing the Safe and Sane Way

Not Medicine, But Nourishing, Simple Foods In Reduced Quantities, The Sensible Way to Regain Normal Weight

Dear Friends in Circleville:

So many times during the Cooking School week I am asked to talk about diets. As a rule the question means a reducing diet. And the subject is too lengthy to be gone into from the Cooking School platform.

You know, our good American common sense seems to have come back to us in the matter of diet. For while only a few years ago the Hollywood diet of eating almost nothing was in vogue, and dangerous patent medicines for quick reducing were being widely advertised, today the methods followed by fashionable women in Hollywood and others are sane diets. As a rule to be rigidly followed it is well to know that reducing medicines are widely condemned by doctors; not only because of too-quick reduction of flesh, but for dangerous drugs in them which affect heart, glands, and in many cases do harm which can never be remedied.

Take It Slowly

Even if the reducing medicines were not dangerous, their abnormal method of removing flesh usually leaves the flesh baggy, the face wrinkled and drawn. The popular method of reducing, among sensible women and among all women who follow the advice of their physicians, is to eat a sensible diet. First actually less of all foods than formerly. Second, eat very little fats and starches; which means butter, cream, ice cream, salad dressings, gravies, sauces, go out of the diet almost entirely for the first three weeks; and that desserts such as pie, cake, puddings, candies, also the starchy dishes such as rice, macaroni, spaghetti, breads and other dishes made with flour and cereals, are eliminated at first. Later these foods may be taken daily, in very small amounts.

A Fruit Cleansing

One famous physician who has success in reducing overweight men and women starts any reducing diet with a week of cleansing with fruit. He makes his patients drink plenty of fruit juices, whenever hungry; and to eat fruit and green, raw vegetables, for one week; with the only hot food consisting of clear, hot bouillon, taken at noon and evening, and weak, black coffee, or plain tea in the morning; fruit juices and fruits and uncooked vegetables in addition complete his diet for the first week only.

Then the patient is given small meals consisting of simple vegetables, lamb chop or chicken or fish, whole wheat bread, in small amounts; with fruit juices between meals. This goes on two or three weeks, and there is, needless to say, a gradual reduction of weight; and a toning of the whole system. If the patient is very fat this diet is continued for several weeks—or indefinitely. But for general reducing, the strenuous limitations continue for about four weeks. Then there is a gradual return to normal diet with the exception of too much fats, starches and sweets. These, almost any doctor will tell you, do not belong in the diet of any one. But in small amounts may be taken by people of normal weight.

Reducing Menus

Remember that no one is advised to go to any kind of reducing diet unless her physician says such an undertaking is all right. But if he says heart and general health condition will permit, a diet such as the following will certainly not put on new fat, and you will find that the old fat is going away.

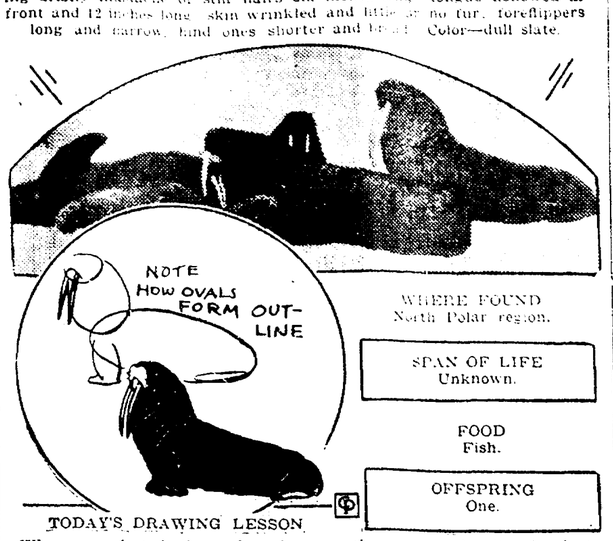
NATURE PRESENTS—

Walrus

PHYSICAL FEATURES

Nine feet long, four feet high, very broad head with tusks sometimes two feet long, wide mouth with upper lip overhanging lower and carrying bristly mustache of stiff hairs six inches long, tongue hollowed in front and 12 inches long, skin wrinkled and little or no fur, foreflippers long and narrow, hind ones shorter and broad. Color—dull slate.



WHERE FOUND
North Polar region.

SPAN OF LIFE
Unknown.

FOOD
Fish.

OFFSPRING
One.

TODAY'S DRAWING LESSON

When unmolested, the walrus is a gentle creature despite the fact that his tusks, growing downward from his upper jaw, make him look very fierce, to say nothing of his enormous size, bloodshot eyes, bristling whiskers and loud roaring. His tusks are powerful weapons when he needs them to fight a polar bear, but he uses these mostly to dig up the small shellfish he finds on the bed of the sea. The tusks are very valuable and the body, sometimes weighing 4,000 pounds, gives half a ton of excellent oil. The best buffing leathers today are made of walrus hide.

CHOCOLATE DOUGHNUTS

Four cups sifted flour; four teaspoons baking powder; one and one half teaspoons salt; one and one fourth cups sugar; three eggs, well beaten; three squares unsweetened chocolate, melted; one teaspoon vanilla; one cup milk.

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift together three times. Add sugar gradually to eggs, beating thoroughly; then chocolate and vanilla, and blend. Add flour, alternately with milk, a small amount at a time, mixing thoroughly after each addition. Knead lightly on well floured board. Roll one third inch thick. Cut with floured, medium doughnut cutter. Fry in deep fat, 385 deg. F., three to four minutes, or until done, turning frequently. Drain on paper toweis. Sprinkle with powdered sugar. Makes four dozen medium doughnuts.

"FELT MISERABLE MOST OF THE TIME"

Then Kellogg's ALL-BRAN Checked Her Constipation*

Read Mrs. Marsden's letter: "I have been a subject of constipation* for the last 11 years. I felt miserable and irritable most of the time. My husband is a manager of a chain store. He said 'Why don't you try Kellogg's ALL-BRAN?'

"ALL-BRAN helped me right away. I have taken it now for the past 5 months, and I am as regular as a clock. My health is fine, and I am full of pep."—Mrs. Charles Marsden, 681 Merrick St., Detroit, Mich.

*Constipation due to insufficient "bulk" in meals.

ALL-BRAN provides gentle "bulk" to aid regular habits. It also supplies vitamin B and iron.

The "bulk" of ALL-BRAN is more effective than the "bulk" in fruits and vegetables, as it does not break down within the body. Two tablespoonfuls daily are usually sufficient. If not corrected this way, see your doctor.

Questions and Answers

Will you give us a recipe for ginger cookies?

This ginger cookie is made with sour milk and is very well liked:

Ginger Cookies

1 C. brown sugar
1 C. baking molasses
1 C. shortening
2 eggs
5 C. flour
1 C. sour milk
½ tsp. salt
1 Tbsp. ginger
4 tsp. soda

Cream sugar, shortening, ginger and salt. Add eggs. Mix well and stir in molasses. Dissolve 1 tsp. soda in sour milk and stir into above mixture. Add remaining 3 tsp. soda in the flour. Drop by spoonfuls on greased cookie sheet and bake in hot oven.

Will you tell me how to dry corn?

In drying corn there are several methods commonly used. The principles involved are these: First, dip husked corn in hot water 8 to 12 minutes to set the milk. Cool, cut from the cob and spread on trays. Corn should not be dried too rapidly or it will scorch, but a temperature of 130 to 140 degrees is advised. The corn should be in the doughy stage before it is cut from the cob. There are regular dryers that can be made to maintain a low temperature, or exposure to sunlight may produce slow drying. If your oven temperature can be held this low, it is possible to use your oven.

Will you give me a recipe for Green Gage Marmalade?

Green Gage Marmalade is a plum product very much like plum butter, but it is a light green color which is most attractive.

Green Gage Marmalade

1 qt. green gage plums
1 C. cold water
3 C. sugar

Wash plums, remove pits and cut in small pieces. Do not peel. Measure, add water and cook until plums are tender. Then add sugar and continue cooking until fruit is clear. Seal in sterile jars.

Do you have a recipe for Tomato Creole Sauce for steak, rice, etc.?

For dressing ordinary steak or decorating plain boiled rice, tomato creole is one of the favorite sauces.

Tomato Creole Sauce

1 qt. sliced white onions
12 finely chopped green peppers

Mix together the onions and peppers, let simmer until soft. Add about twice this bulk in tomatoes and cook together over a low fire until tender. Season to taste. Pack into clean, hot jars and seal immediately.

AVACADO SALAD

Three avocados; one grapefruit; two oranges; one cup strawberries; lemon juice; French dressing.

Cut avacados in half, beginning at the stem end. Remove the large seed. Then cut up fresh fruits are added to the hole left where the seed was removed. French dressing made with olive oil and lemon juice is more suitable to serve with the rich buttery flesh of avacados than is mayonnaise.

Another good salad combination is:

Frozen Pineapple Rings

One half cup sugar; one cup hot water; one half cup grapefruit juice; one orange; one lemon; one number two can crushed pineapple; two teaspoons gelatine; one fourth cup water; green coloring; mayonnaise; fresh strawberries; chopped nuts; cream cheese.

Heat the sugar and water together. Boil five minutes after sugar is melted. Add the gelatine which has been soaked in the cold water, and when melted, cool. Add the pineapple, the other fruit juice and green coloring. Freeze until solid for one inch from the edge of the freezing tray, or until about half frozen. Beat thoroughly and pack in individual ring molds, or in narrow ice tray, freezing until very hard. Unmold on shredded lettuce and watercress and fill the centers with fresh fruit. If frozen in freezing tray, unmold, cut into strips, then arrange around a mound of the fresh frit salad. Cream cheese balls which have been rolled in finely chopped nuts or balls made of cream cheese and Roquefort cheese may be served with this salad.

I'm not taking anything away from those fellows, but who did they ever lick? Max Baer, to suggestion that he "read up on" Marc Anthony, Aristotle, Archimedes, and Attila.

CARAMELLO PIE

To make a delicious pie use:

Three fourths cup granulated sugar; one third cup water; one and one half cups cream; three tablespoons cornstarch; two tablespoons cold milk; one fourth teaspoon salt; three eggs, separated; one and one half cups seedless raisins; one cup walnut kernels, chopped; baked pastry shell (nine inch); six tablespoons granulated sugar for meringue.

Combine three fourths cup sugar and water in a large saucepan and cook until a golden brown in color. Add cream and cook until sugar is dissolved, stirring continuously; remove from fire. Moisten cornstarch in milk, add salt and beaten egg yolks, and mix until well blended. Add slowly to hot cream, stirring briskly. Add raisins and nuts, return to fire, and cook until thick. Pour into baked pastry shell, cover with meringue made from sugar and bake in moderate oven, 350 degrees F. for fifteen minutes. Cool before serving. You realize just how effective a good pie of raisin pie can be in erasing the worry line from the average tired business man's forehead? It certainly deserves mention in the "advice to unhappy wives" column. It's not just the flavor of the pie that accounts for all the satisfaction it gives. There are some unseen values values which come to light only through feeding tests. These values are the alkalinity of raisins and their vitamin and mineral content.

Panics Favor Autumn

It seems that most panics occur in the autumn. Black Friday, one of the worst in September, 1869, and the panic of '73 started in September. The 1907 panic was in the autumn. An exception was the beginning of the 1920-21 depression, which broke in April. The panic of 1929 began in October.

Largest Caves on Earth

Attesting how slowly natural wonders attain universal celebrity is the case of the Carlsbad caverns in New Mexico, which have been recognized for almost twenty years as the largest caves on earth, but continue to draw almost half of their visitors annually from the neighboring state of Texas.

Mrs. Thurn Discusses Diets for Reducing the Safe and Sane Way

Not Medicine, But Nourishing, Simple Foods In Reduced Quantities, The Sensible Way to Regain Normal Weight

Dear Friends in Circleville:

So many times during the Cooking School week I am asked to talk about diets. As a rule the question means a reducing diet. And the subject is too lengthy to be gone into from the Cooking School platform.

You know, our good American common sense seems to have come back to us in the matter of diet. For while only a few years ago the Hollywood diet of eating almost nothing was in vogue, and dangerous patent medicines for quick reducing were being widely advertised, today the methods followed by fashionable women in Hollywood and others are sane diets. As a rule to be rigidly followed it is well to know that reducing medicines are widely condemned by doctors; not only because of too-quick reduction of flesh, but for dangerous drugs in them which affect heart, glands, and in many cases do harm which can never be remedied.

Take It Slowly

Even if the reducing medicines were not dangerous, their abnormal method of removing flesh usually leaves the flesh baggy, the face wrinkled and drawn. The popular method of reducing, among sensible women and among all women who follow the advice of their physicians, is to eat a sensible diet. First actually less of all foods than formerly. Second, eat very little fats and starches; which means butter, cream, ice cream, salad dressings, gravies, sauces, go out of the diet almost entirely for the first three weeks; and that desserts such as pie, cake, puddings, candies, also the starchy dishes such as rice, macaroni, spaghetti, breads and other dishes made with flour and cereals, are eliminated at first. Later these foods may be taken daily, in very small amounts.

A Fruit Cleansing

One famous physician who has success in reducing overweight men and women starts any reducing diet with a week of cleansing with fruit. He makes his patients drink plenty of fruit juices, whenever hungry; and to eat fruit and green, raw vegetables, for one week; with the only hot food consisting of clear, hot bouillon, taken at noon and evening, and weak, black coffee, or plain tea in the morning; fruit juices and fruits and uncooked vegetables in addition complete his diet for the first week only.

Then the patient is given small meals consisting of simple vegetables, lamb chop or chicken or fish, whole wheat bread, in small amounts; with fruit juices between meals. This goes on two or three weeks, and there is, needless to say, a gradual reduction of weight; and a toning of the whole system. If the patient is very fat this diet is continued for several weeks—or indefinitely. But for general reducing, the strenuous limitations continue for about four weeks. Then there is a gradual return to normal diet with the exception of too much fats, starches and sweets. These, almost any doctor will tell you, do not belong in the diet of any one. But in small amounts may be taken by people of normal weight.

Reducing Menus

Remember that no one is advised to go to any kind of reducing diet unless her physician says such an undertaking is all right. But if he says heart and general health condition will permit, a diet such as the following will certainly not put on new fat, and you will find that the old fat is going away.

NATURE PRESENTS— Walrus

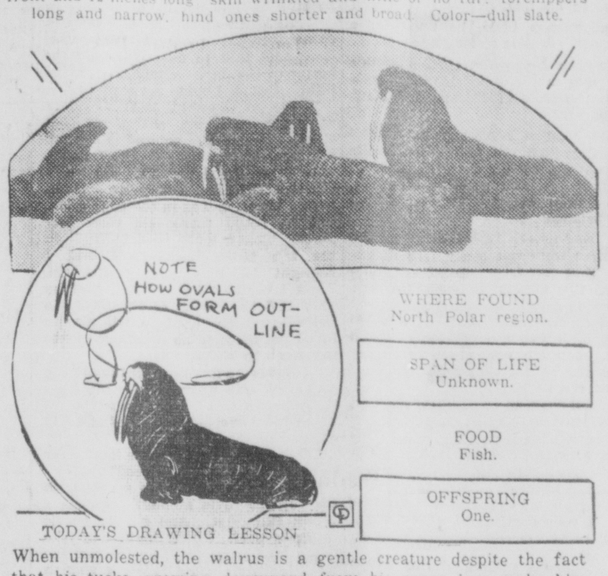
PHYSICAL FEATURES

Nine feet long, four feet high, very broad head with tusks sometimes two feet long, wide mouth with upper lip overhanging lower and carrying bristly mustache of stiff hairs six inches long, tongue hollowed in front and 12 inches long, skin wrinkled and little or no fur; foreflippers long and narrow, hind ones shorter and broad. Color—dull slate.



WHERE FOUND
North Polar region.

SPAN OF LIFE
Unknown.

FOOD
Fish.

OFFSPRING
One.

TODAY'S DRAWING LESSON

When unmolested, the walrus is a gentle creature despite the fact that his tusks, growing downward from his upper jaw, make him look very fierce, to say nothing of his enormous size, bloodshot eyes, bristling whiskers and loud roaring. His tusks are powerful weapons when he needs them to fight a polar bear, but he uses these mostly to dig up the small shellfish he finds on the bed of the sea. The tusks are very valuable and the body, sometimes weighing 4,000 pounds, gives half a ton of excellent oil. The best buffing leathers today are made of walrus hide.

CHOCOLATE DOUGHNUTS

Four cups sifted flour; four teaspoons baking powder; one and one half teaspoons salt; one and one fourth cups sugar; three eggs, well beaten; three squares unsweetened chocolate, melted; one teaspoon vanilla; one cup milk.

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift together three times. Add sugar gradually to eggs, beating thoroughly; then chocolate and vanilla, and blend. Add flour, alternately with milk, a small amount at a time, mixing thoroughly after each addition. Knead lightly on well floured board. Roll one third inch thick. Cut with floured, medium doughnut cutter. Fry in deep fat, 385 deg. F., three to four minutes, or until done, turning frequently. Drain on paper towels. Sprinkle with powdered sugar. Makes four dozen medium doughnuts.

Questions and Answers

Will you give us a recipe for ginger cookies?

This ginger cookie is made with sour milk and is very well liked:

Ginger Cookies

1 C. brown sugar
1 C. baking molasses
1 C. shortening
2 eggs
5 C. flour
1 C. sour milk
½ tsp. salt
1 Tbsp. ginger
4 tsp. soda

Cream sugar, shortening, ginger and salt. Add eggs. Mix well and stir in molasses. Dissolve 1 tsp. soda in sour milk and stir into above mixture. Add remaining 3 tsp. soda in the flour. Drop by spoonfuls on greased cookie sheet and bake in hot oven.

Will you tell me how to dry corn?

In drying corn there are several methods commonly used. The principles involved are these: First, dip husked corn in hot water 8 to 12 minutes to set the milk. Cool, cut from the cob and spread on trays. Corn should not be dried too rapidly or it will scorch, but a temperature of 130 to 140 degrees is advised. The corn should be in the doughy stage before it is cut from the cob. There are regular dryers that can be made to maintain a low temperature, or exposure to sunlight may produce slow drying. If your oven temperature can be held this low, it is possible to use your oven.

Will you give me a recipe for Green Gage Marmalade?

Green Gage Marmalade is a plum product very much like plum butter, but it is a light green color which is most attractive.

Green Gage Marmalade

1 qt. green gage plums
1 C. cold water
3 C. sugar

Wash plums, remove pits and cut in small pieces. Do not peel. Measure, add water and cook until plums are tender. Then add sugar and continue cooking until fruit is clear. Seal in sterile jars.

Do you have a recipe for Tomato Creole Sauce for steak, rice, etc.?

For dressing ordinary steak or decorating plain boiled rice, tomato creole is one of the favorite sauces.

Tomato Creole Sauce

1 qt. sliced white onions
12 finely chopped green peppers

Mix together the onions and peppers, let simmer until soft. Add about twice this bulk in tomatoes and cook together over a low fire until tender. Season to taste. Pack into clean, hot jars and seal immediately.

"FELT MISERABLE MOST OF THE TIME"

Then Kellogg's ALL-BRAN Checked Her Constipation*

Read Mrs. Marsden's letter: "I have been a subject of constipation* for the last 11 years. I felt miserable and irritable most of the time. My husband is a manager of a chain store. He said 'Why don't you try Kellogg's ALL-BRAN?'

"ALL-BRAN helped me right away. I have taken it now for the past 5 months, and I am as regular as a clock. My health is fine, and I am full of pep."—Mrs. Charles Marsden, 681 Merrick St., Detroit, Mich.

*Constipation due to insufficient "bulk" in meals.

ALL-BRAN provides gentle "bulk" to aid regular habits. It also supplies vitamin B and iron.

The "bulk" of ALL-BRAN is more effective than the "bulk" in fruits and vegetables, as it does not break down within the body. Two tablespoonfuls daily are usually sufficient. If not corrected this way, see your doctor.

AVACADO SALAD

Three avocados; one grapefruit; two oranges; one cup strawberries; lemon juice; French dressing.

Cut avacados in half, beginning at the stem end. Remove the large seed. Then cut up fresh fruits are added to the hole left where the seed was removed. French dressing made with olive oil and lemon juice is more suitable to serve with the rich buttery flesh of avacados than is mayonnaise.

Another good salad combination is:

Frozen Pineapple Rings

One half cup sugar; one cup hot water; one half cup grapefruit juice; one orange; one lemon; one number two can crushed pineapple; two teaspoons gelatine; one fourth cup water; green coloring; mayonnaise; fresh strawberries; chopped nuts; cream cheese.

Heat the sugar and water together. Boil five minutes after sugar is melted. Add the gelatine which has been soaked in the cold water, and when melted, cool. Add the pineapple, the other fruit juice and green coloring. Freeze until solid for one inch from the edge of the freezing tray, or until about half frozen. Beat thoroughly and pack in individual ring molds, or in narrow ice tray, freezing until very hard. Unmold on shredded lettuce and watercress and fill the centers with fresh fruit. If frozen in freezing tray, unmold, cut into strips, then arrange around a mound of the fresh frit salad. Cream cheese balls which have been rolled in finely chopped nuts or balls made of cream cheese and Roquefort cheese may be served with this salad.

CARAMELLO PIE

To make a delicious pie use:

Three fourths cup granulated sugar; one third cup water; one and one half cups cream; three tablespoons cornstarch; two tablespoons cold milk; one fourth teaspoon salt; three eggs, separated; one and one half cups seedless raisins; one cup walnut kernels, chopped; baked pastry shell (nine inch); six tablespoons granulated sugar for meringue.

Combine three fourths cup sugar and water in a large saucepan and cook until a golden brown in color. Add cream and cook until sugar is dissolved, stirring continuously; remove from fire. Moisten cornstarch in milk, add salt and beaten egg yolks, and mix until well blended. Add slowly to hot cream, stirring briskly. Add raisins and nuts, return to fire, and cook until thick. Pour into baked pastry shell, cover with meringue made from sugar and bake in moderate oven, 350 degrees F. for fifteen minutes. Cool before serving. Serves six.

And here's another! Do you realize just how effective a good piece of raisin pie can be in erasing the worry line from the average tired business man's forehead? It certainly deserves mention in the "advice to unhappy wives" column. It's not just the flavor of the pie that accounts for all the satisfaction it gives. There are some unseen values—values which come to light only through feeding tests. These values are the alkalinity of raisins and their vitamin and mineral content.

Panics Favor Autumn

It seems that most panics occur in the autumn. Black Friday, one of the worst in September, 1869, and the panic of '73 started in September. The 1907 panic was in the autumn. An exception was the beginning of the 1920-21 depression, which broke in April. The panic of 1929 began in October.

Attesting how slowly natural wonders attain universal celebrity is the case of the Carlsbad caverns in New Mexico, which have been recognized for almost twenty years as the largest caves on earth, but continue to draw almost half of their visitors annually from the neighboring state of Texas.

ON TO ARMAGEDDON

DOWN from the seaports of Italy steams a fleet of vessels loaded with guns and gun fodder for Ethiopian's dreadful heat. Benito Mussolini, that beloved man of peace, fondly bids them a farewell with outstretched hand. Some of those fellows may come back but they will never be the same. They left with a smile on their faces and cheers for Il Duce. There will be another sort of smile on their faces when they actually get into battle, and in place of the cheers there will be a muttered curse and a sort of nameless despair in their hearts as they finally realize that they have again been tricked by the flame of patriotism, shamelessly betrayed by those false and cunning words of Benito Mussolini.

Because that Madman of Italy has frankly told the League of Nations that he will not desist from his murderous policy of invading Ethiopia and forcing the Lion of Judah to his knees. And the League, gaining heart and hope from the fervent pledges of support from sixteen other nations; reviving somewhat by the firm stand of Great Britain and Russia, is determined that Italy shall have to answer to that international body for her rash act.

The modern type of Caesar will have to choose, therefore, between an honorable and sensible withdrawal from African land that does not belong to him, or face the enmity and perhaps the guns of an encircling group of nations that now has something more than peace at stake. The League was a weakling in the Japanese-Manchurian situation, but it would seem that the weakness has passed.

If Benito Mussolini places into action that cowardly and treacherous attack against Ethiopians, if he release his dogs of war upon a nation that is certainly no match for him in the modern sense of armaments, then he will have the satisfaction of knowing that he himself opened the gates that lead eternally and inevitably to Armageddon. And in the years to come he will have the doubtful pleasure of gazing upon row after row of the dead, of looking into eyes of those that were bereft by his vicious command, of walking amid poverty and scenes of horrible desolation.

If he is content to deliberately open the way for his barbaric business then the world should come to him, not on bended knees of supplication and pleasing, but with a gun in one hand and a sabre in the other. He understands languages of that kind better and he will listen attentively.

COULDN'T FOOL TEACHERS

AND now it appears that a high school faculty got the original low-down on the late Huey P. Long.

While attending high school in the backwoods region of Louisiana, Huey formed a secret society. As he himself used to tell it, the society "was run to control things, laying down certain rules the students would have to follow, and if they followed the faculty instead of our rules, we kept them off the baseball team or the debating team."

When the faculty discovered this novel bit of adolescent racketeering, they promptly expelled Huey, sending him forwith into the dark world of educational unenlightenment.

The interesting thing is that Louisiana's future dictator was simply resorting to the ruthless high-pressure technique that finally brought him political power — and death.

Credit that high school faculty with a discernment which, if heeded in time, would have saved the bayou state from more than one severe headache.

CONTRACT BRIDGE

By E. V. SHEPARD, Famous Bridge Teacher

A MODERN DELUGE THREATENS

WHAT IS THE best book on contract bridge? Which is the best bidding system? How do experts rank? Do the results of tournaments and staged contests mean anything? Upon which elements of the game do experts in general agree? Do teachers really have to pay tribute to racketeers? Is —— a recognized authority?

Formerly the majority of questions were received from individuals, both teachers and players. During the past eighteen months more than forty bridge clubs have sent in official inquiries for help in deciding upon something like a standard game to recommend to their members.

Ballyhoo and high pressure salesmanship are as rampant in bridge as in a period of land booms, oil stock promotion or automobile advertising campaign.

No wonder the usual stream of questions has risen to flood proportions. A deluge threatens. Lacking Noah and his ark, sane bridge players will find perfect safety upon higher bridge ground.

Contract bridge is a genuine science, not a mere pastime. Card distributions follow unvarying laws, not chance. Players are competent to formulate rules of procedure only to the extent of their familiarity with the laws governing card happenings and their ability to make practical use of those laws.

There are essential and non-essentials, with known dangers to be avoided, whether designing a racing yacht, a motor car or a bridge system of bid, lead and play. Only a highly trained specialist is competent to design any one of those structures. It requires a master designer to offer an improvement. Less talented designers merely palm off as real inventions new combinations of old elements, lacking additional value.

Sales talks to prospects must dwell upon the supposed merits of non-essential gadgets, to have something different from what every expert uses in common. Our greatest experts adhere to the most efficient methods known. They avidly seek newly discovered facts, making practical use of each opportunity to improve their game in any particular. It is a joy to know them, to play with them, to learn from them and to try to discover things which they want to know.

Habitual partners usually employ special minor devices to cover special holdings and situations. Without meaning to use secret conventions such variants confuse weaker opponents or casual partners, until the special meanings are explained or discovered. Such happenings are of minor importance, coming under the heading of non-essentials. What the public should know is the essentials used by experts.

Each week there will be some articles upon basic facts and experts' methods of advantageously employing them. Eventually these special articles will answer all important questions asked.

THE DEVIL'S MANSION

COPYRIGHT By REX JARDIN

CHAPTER 52

BLAIR TOOK his revolver out of his pocket and held it tightly in his hand, then stepped ahead on his tiptoes. When he had walked to the prow, he looked back for Charlie. He had not heard the Lav coming after him. Yes, there he was, at his elbow. . . .

"A" . . . the letter danced in front of his eyes when he saw it, shiny brass against a white door. Janet was in there! Janet!

Blair's heart leaped, when he turned again to Charlie. "Is there another entrance?"

"Yeh, one from the saloon, and one from stateroom 'B'."

Putting his hand on the brass knob, Blair found the door to stateroom "A" from the deck locked.

"Better try the saloon."

Charlie led the way there. The saloon was dark. Taking Blair by the hand, he drew him through the room, and before Blair knew it, his hand was touching cold metal! A doorknob! This, too, would not turn. It must be locked from the inside!

"Hell! We're sailin'!" he heard Charlie hiss behind him. True, the yacht was moving.

The window on the deck! This might be open! Blair, half stumbling over a chair, turned to leave. It was getting lighter. The dawn was breaking. He could see dimly the objects in the saloon.

In a few moments the two were on deck again . . . and Blair was standing under the window of stateroom "A". It was open a crack.

Unfastening the shutters, he peered into the stateroom. Someone was lying on the bed . . . Janet! It must be Janet!

If he could get her out and down the rope while the yacht was moving slowly . . . they could get into the launch and be away . . . but if the yacht were to speed up!

He lurched against the window. The Wanderer was speeding up!

"Janet!" he called softly, so softly he hardly heard his own voice. "Janet!"

The figure on the bed rose. Janet was looking toward the window, her eyes opened wide, staring at him.

"It's I . . . Blair!" Pushing open the window, he leaped into the stateroom, and Janet was in his arms, her face pressed close to his.

He was kissing her lips, her eyes, her hair. . . .

"I've a launch outside . . . it may be dangerous . . . but we can try it. . . ."

"Who's there?" a voice demanded. Blair, his arms still around Janet, looked around. The voice seemed at his side.

Janet covered her face and started to moan.

"Who's there?" came the question again.

Blair looked bewildered at Janet. Where was the voice coming from? Her eyes met his, and then moved to the door which was just a few feet from where they were standing. The door evidently led into stateroom "B".

Gently taking his arms from the girl, Blair's fingers tightened around his revolver, and tiptoeing to the door, he flung it open and stepped in.

There was a scream and then silence. . . .

The light switch was near the door. So snapping it on, Blair looked at the thing on the floor . . . the thing that had screamed and then fallen at his feet.

Recoiling a little, he knelt for a moment. A man? Heavens!

Maurice Boisevain, . . . was this he? The love child of Morelle Boisevain, the child of Morelle and Maurice Creel?

The head of a man, yes. A head bristling with red hair like Morelle Boisevain's, except more vivid, more brilliant . . . hair such as Blair had never seen before. Coarse, almost like bristles. . . .

A head as big as his own . . . the features were not badly formed, except that the face seemed evil, horrible, the mouth twisted, the lips bluish in hue.

A face that might have been handsome if it had not carried so much hate, so much vengeance in its expression.

But the body. . . .

It could not be more than two and a half feet in height; strongly built regardless of the stature. The limbs were wiry but muscular. The small hands were clinched, the muscles of the arms knotted.

The body was clad in a red velvet robe, a robe that might have fitted a small child. Green slippers were on the feet.

He put his hand on the wrist of the dwarf at his feet.

Maurice had fallen when he had come in . . . screamed and fallen. He might have fainted.

But no, there was no pulse, nothing to indicate the man was alive, although the green eyes were open.

Hesitating a moment, Blair closed the eyes. Maurice was dead. Probably of fright, he thought. He who had been so fearless in the dark. . . .

Glancing around the room, Blair noticed a well-bound leather box, with straps for carrying. In the side were two small apertures. Perhaps this was the way Maurice had entered the boat . . . unseen by the crew. As luggage.

Perhaps this was the way he had traveled, afraid that anyone would see him. . . .

Closing the door behind him, Rodman was in stateroom "A".

"He's dead, Janet. He must have died of heart failure, when I came in."

The girl clung to Blair and put shaking arms around his neck, "Darling, it was so terrible . . ." she kept murmuring.

"We'll go now. I'll call the captain and tell him to stop." Blair gently put Janet on the bed, and reached for the phone. Yes, O'Malley was willing to stop. Glad to, if the fiend in stateroom "B" was dead, as Mr. Rodman said.

"I never really saw him in there . . . Maurice I mean," Janet was saying. "He told me I would never see him. . . . Twice I saw his face in Miss Boisevain's crystal '. . . even that was terrible. . . ."

"He's dead, Janet, darling, don't worry any more. . . ."

"But, Blair, he flitted into a leather box! I nearly died when I got into the car at Miss Boisevain's, the car that took us to Vancouver. I thought I was alone at first, until I heard him talk, and discovered he was in the box. . . . I broke a string of diamonds he gave me, and threw them out. It was the only thing I could think of. Did you find them?"

"Yes, that's how I finally came here."

"And Blair, at the hotel he used to come into my room at night, after dark and talk to me. He could see better in the dark he said than in the light. But, I, I could not see him. . . .

"Here on the ship, he spent hours at night with me, sitting on that stool . . ." and she pointed to a small footstool on the floor . . . "telling me how much he loved me. He made Captain O'Malley marry us . . . in here. Maurice was in the next room, but he could throw his voice any place. That's what used to frighten me the most, because at first I thought he was right beside me. Then I realized he was not, that he only had the power of throwing his voice. . . . He used to tell me he loved me because he could not mould my mind to his.

"You see he gave me all the orders, and then was near so he could hear me repeat them. I don't know what he would have done if I had tried to escape, or disobey him. . . ."

"He's dead, dear, and the Wanderer has stopped. Shall we go?"

"Yes! But what shall we do with his things? His money? He has a trunk full of it. And all the jewels he gave me? Every night when he came in, I would find on the bed the next morning some jewel, a ring, a necklace, something."

"Rightfully they would be yours, wouldn't they?"

"No! Let's take them to Nita . . . she's stood for so much from him."

While Janet was gathering her things, Blair looked around the stateroom. It was luxuriously furnished, but the mirrors, there were many of them, were all opaque.

"Maurice painted them with something the first night. I heard him," Janet said. "He did the same thing at the hotel in Vancouver."

There was a little silence and Janet began again. "Blair, one night he read to me . . . some poems of Shelley's . . . in the hotel. It was as dark as pitch in the room. Another time he acted out a whole play for me . . . here. If I had not been so frightened I would have marveled at it. . . ."

In half an hour, Janet and Blair were in the big launch which belonged to the Wanderer, Janet's luggage and Maurice's belongings beside them. Charlie was in the small boat, waving to them happily.

"Maurice told me, Blair, that before he met me he hated everyone, even his mother, for he blamed her for all his troubles, although he did not tell me what they were. He said he did not know then what love meant. And that, through me, he would be regenerated. . . ."

Blair interposed:

"Captain O'Malley is going to take him out to sea and bury him, Janet. It's best, I think. And we're not going to lose any time getting back to New York!"

"Are you quite sure he's dead, Blair?" Janet asked as she snuggled up to him.

"Quite. Shall we be married here in Seattle now . . . as soon as we land?"

"Why . . . I guess so."

Blair kissed her upturned lips, and patted her golden hair.

THEATRES

AT THE GRAND

Alice Brady is so devoted to her dogs that she has succeeded in breaking down the Hollywood studio rule which prohibits canines "on the lot," and her Scotties and wire-haired fox terrier accompany her wherever she goes. Miss Braddy comes to the Grand Theatre on Friday in the Universal comedy, "Lady Tubbs."

AT THE CLIFTONA

"The Nitwits" vs. the masked terror, the Black Widow, is the main event at the Cliftona Theatre tonight. Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey are the contenders for the sleuthing title in this comedy bout in seven reels said to end in a knockout laugh.

Tomorrow the Cliftona will present, on their stage, the deluxe presentation, "The Merry Whirl Revue."

AT THE CIRCLE

Boris Karloff, creator of the screen roles of Frankenstein and the Mummy, dispenses even more chilling and thrilling excitement in "The Ghoul," showing Thursday and Friday at the Circle Theatre. The story, by Frank King and Leonard Hines, concerns the stealing of a remarkable jewel from a famous Egyptian tomb and the strange manner of its recovery.

STAGE SHOW AT CLIFTONA

"I haven't a kick in the world," said Chelm St. Orr, the vaudeville performer, altho he uses his feet extensively in his daily routine, both professional and private.

Mr. St. Orr, armless, appears with his brother William, and the two have played all the leading theatre circuits. Robert Ripley cartooned St. Orr in his "Believe-it-or-not" and characterized him as the "Eighth Wonder of the World," which is not hard to believe when one sees him play the trombone, trumpet, and snare drums, as well as drive nails and saw wood, swinging the hammer and saw with his feet. There is a demonstration of marksmanship, hitting bulls-eyes, and one feat of hitting a piece of chalk, which his brother, William, who is on the other side of the stage, is holding in his mouth. They have been doing this act for years, and so far "bill" has not been hit.

The brothers will be in Circleville appearing at the Cliftona Theatre as one of the feature acts with Irving M. Lewis' Mystery Revue, which plays for one day engagement tomorrow, Saturday, September 21. There are 20 people in the cast, including six vaudeville acts, a stage orchestra and a chorus of pretty girl dancers.

The latest Wheeler and Woolsey picture "The Nitwits" will also be shown as part of this extraordinary show.

Poems That Live

TEARS, IDLE TEARS

Tears, idle tears, I know not what they mean,
Tears from the depth of some divine despair
Rise in the heart, and gather to the eyes,
In looking on the happy Autumn-fields,
And thinking of the days that are no more.

Fresh as the first beam glittering on the sail,
That brings our friends up from the underworld,
Sad as the last which reddens over one
That sinks with all we love below the verge;
So sad, so fresh, the days that are no more.

Ah, sad and strange as in dark summer dawns
The earliest pipe of half-awakened birds
To dying ears, when unto dying eyes
The casement slowly grows a glimmering square;
So sad, so strange, the days that are no more.

Dear as remembered kisses after death,
And sweet as those by hopeless fancy feigned
On lips that are for others; deep as love,
Deep as first love, and wild with all regret;
O Death in Life, the days that are no more.

Youth Administration's Success Obscured By Personal Animosities

WASHINGTON — Some of the most worth while of New Deal projects continue to be buried under a cloud of pettifogging personal bickering. They make swell stories for the newspapers, but a poor showing for the public.

Such is the short history of the National Youth Administration. Behind the scenes, it is doing a bang-up job. But its personal animosities threaten to hide the truth.

Both amusing and tragic is the fact that the bickering hinges on such all-important things as pride, a pet project and lack of sleep.

Chief bickerers are Aubrey Williams, hard-driving, relentless chief of the Youth Administration; and John Studebaker, industrious, visionary Commissioner of Education who thought he should have been.

Originally, Studebaker helped plan the job, felt that the education of Youth should come under his bureau, groomed himself as administrator. But he made one grievous error.

In a memo to the President outlining his plans for the Youth Administration, he mentioned the CCC as something which the new project should not follow. Then he threw in a gratuitous crack at the CCC.

Naive and new in Washington, little did Studebaker realize that he had stepped upon the President's prize pet. But he knew it later. Roosevelt considers the CCC his greatest achievement, and he flatly refused to let Studebaker handle the new Youth Administration.

◈ ◈ ◈

Ambition

Studebaker is a conscientious little man, who once achieved big things by conducting a forum in Des Moines, and would like to do the same for the entire country. But when Roosevelt took away his Youth toy, he was like a small boy. He threaten to resign.

Whereupon Roosevelt handed him another toy fulfilment of the dream of a nation-wide forum. It was to be financed from Youth Administration funds for the youth of the nation. But Studebaker was to be in charge.

He was jubilant.

It happened at this time that Aubrey Wilhams had been up for several nights trying to rescue veterans from the hurricane belt in Florida. He was half dead from loss of sleep.

When Studebaker announced plans for taking away a large slice of his youth money, Williams said: "Hell, no;" and the President, having given him a free hand, stood by him.

So once again Studebaker was left out in the cold.

◈ ◈ ◈

Progress

Despite this, the Youth Administration has plugged ahead. It has pretty well shunned politics. It has belied the original criticism that it would be a Democratic vote-getting proposition.

It will mail 300,000 checks to youngsters in schools and colleges during the first two weeks of October. And in contract with most New Deal projects, it is handling overhead administration on only 3 per cent of its total grant.

Chief originator and background executive of the Youth Administration is Charles Taussig, an original Brain Truster, and one of the few who learned the lesson that publicity always kills a ghost-writer. A lesson former Brain Truster, No 1, Raymon Moley, notably never learned.

The House Of Boland

Here is another near record for nepotism hung up by Congressman Patrick J. Boland, Democratic House Whip, of Scranton, Pa.:

Lenore Boland, daughter, draws a salary of $276.66 per month as secretary to the Congressman.

James Powell, Jr., Boland's nephew, draws an annual salary of $3,600 as House "pair clerk." While holding this job he plans to attend Georgetown University.

Dr. Francis Boland, son of the Congressman, is resident physician at Gallinger Hospital, supported by the Government.

Chris Boland, another son is employed during the summer months as extra clerk at the Scranton Post Office. This post is supposed to be under Civil Service, but the postmaster happens to be Boland's appointee.

John Jennings Boland, another son, is employed with the Securities-Exchange Commission at a salary of $2,600.

NOTE — Congressman Boland's own salary is $10,000.

◈ ◈ ◈

Astor's Man Friday

Peter Grimm, real estate operator for Vincent Astor, is the man behind the serious curtailment of the Government's low cost housing and slum clearance projects.

Although Grimm is a Republican, young Henry Morgenthau brought him to Washington not only to act as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury but also to keep an eye on the Federal Housing Administration. Young Henry has been probing and pulling this apart for some time.

Grimm, a former president of the New York Real Estate Board, and founder of the New York Citizens' Budget Commission, sees out of only one eye when it comes either to government spending or government competition with private real estate.

Low cost housing is in both categories.

However, the FHA, which is merely a system of Government guaranteed loans, is not. It has been a godsend to the real estate operator and the private builder.

On the other hand, Tugwell's suburban developments and Ickes's slum clearance, both paid for 45 per cent by the Government, have offered serious competition to private business.

So Grimm swung his weight against them and for FHA.

This Invention Permits View of One's Stomach

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

THE SPECIALIST in skin diseases has always been envied by his colleagues in other departments of medicine, because the troubles he treats are out where he can see them. He should be, and is able to make an exact diagnosis in 98 per cent of his cases; those in which the physical appearance of the disease follows characteristic lines.

Dr. Clendenlag

The comparative disadvantage under which the internist suffers is easily appreciated. He has to say what is the matter with a liver, which is hidden from him by several layers of abdominal skin, fat and muscle, through which he can barely feel, let alone see.

But this especial advantage which the skin specialist has enjoyed is being challenged in many fields. All the exits and entrances and cul-de-sacs of the body now claim their especial tubes or periscopes, so that the dark internal caves and intimate recesses of our human fabric have yielded one by one to the same close inspection which the dermatologist enjoys with the skin.

Stomach Hard to Inspect

The stomach has been a rather difficult organ to inspect directly. True, for many years we have had a so-called gastroscope, a rigid steel tube which can be thrust in the stomach if the patient is sufficiently complacent and pliable, but the procedure is uncomfortable and unsatisfactory.

These disadvantages have been overcome by the invention of a flexible gastroscope by Dr. Rudolph Schindler, a visiting professor of medicine at the University of Chicago. This tube will bend, and hence does not make the patient as uncomfortable as examination with the stiff old-fashioned gastroscope. A series of mirrors and a light in the end make it into a flexible periscope.

Looking into the stomach with this instrument, the walls are thrown sharply into view. Every small pigment spot can be seen distinctly. The exit from the stomach at the pylorus is a scene of fascinating activity.

Seen from the inside in the living patient, it is evident that the stomach practically divides itself into two compartments by means of a circular muscle. This has never been seen before, because when the stomach is viewed during an abdominal operation, the muscle is relaxed.

Various diseases of the stomach, such as ulcer, gastritis and mucous gastritis, can be plainly seen. All of them have characteristic appearances. So has cancer of the stomach.

ON TO ARMAGEDDON

DOWN from the seaports of Italy steams a fleet of vessels loaded with guns and gun fodder for Ethiopian's dreadful heat. Benito Mussolini, that beloved man of peace, fondly bids them a farewell with outstretched hand. Some of those fellows may come back but they will never be the same. They left with a smile on their faces and cheers for Il Duce. There will be another sort of smile on their faces when they actually get into battle, and in place of the cheers there will be a muttered curse and a sort of nameless despair in their hearts as they finally realize that they have again been tricked by the flame of patriotism, shamelessly betrayed by those false and cunning words of Benito Mussolini.

Because that Madman of Italy has frankly told the League of Nations that he will not desist from his murderous policy of invading Ethiopia and forcing the Lion of Judah to his knees. And the League, gaining heart and hope from the fervent pledges of support from sixteen other nations; reviving somewhat by the firm stand of Great Britain and Russia, is determined that Italy shall have to answer to that international body for her rash act.

The modern type of Caesar will have to choose, therefore, between an honorable and sensible withdrawal from African land that does not belong to him, or face the enmity and perhaps the guns of an encircling group of nations that now has something more than peace at stake. The League was a weakling in the Japanese-Manchurian situation, but it would seem that the weakness has passed.

If Benito Mussolini places into action that cowardly and treacherous attack against Ethiopians, if he release his dogs of war upon a nation that is certainly no match for him in the modern sense of armaments, then he will have the satisfaction of knowing that he himself opened the gates that lead eternally and inevitably to Armageddon. And in the years to come he will have the doubtful pleasure of gazing upon row after row of the dead, of looking into eyes of those that were bereft by his vicious command, of walking amid poverty and scenes of horrible desolation.

If he is content to deliberately open the way for his barbaric business then the world should come to him, not on bended knees of supplication and pleasing, but with a gun in one hand and a sabre in the other. He understands languages of that kind better and he will listen attentively.

COULDN'T FOOL TEACHERS

AND now it appears that a high school faculty got the original lowdown on the late Huey P. Long.

While attending high school in the backwoods region of Louisiana, Huey formed a secret society. As he himself used to tell it, the society "was run to control things, laying down certain rules the students would have to follow, and if they followed the faculty instead of our rules, we kept them off the baseball team or the debating team."

When the faculty discovered this novel bit of adolescent racketeering, they promptly expelled Huey, sending him forwith into the dark world of educational unenlightenment.

The interesting thing is that Louisiana's future dictator was simply resorting to the ruthless high-pressure technique that finally brought him political power — and death.

Credit that high school faculty with a discernment which, if heeded in time, would have saved the bayou state from more than one severe headache.

CONTRACT BRIDGE

By E. V. SHEPARD, Famous Bridge Teacher

A MODERN DELUGE THREATENS

WHAT IS THE best book on contract bridge? Which is the best bidding system? How do experts rank? Do the results of tournaments and staged contests mean anything? Upon which elements of the game do experts in general agree? Do teachers really have to pay tribute to racketeers? Is ——— a recognized authority?

Formerly the majority of questions were received from individuals, both teachers and players. During the past eighteen months more than forty bridge clubs have sent in official inquiries for help in deciding upon something like a standard game to recommend to their members.

Ballyhoo and high pressure salesmanship are as rampant in bridge as in a period of land booms, oil stock promotion or automobile advertising campaign.

No wonder the usual stream of questions has risen to flood proportions. A deluge threatens. Lacking Noah and his ark, sane bridge players will find perfect safety upon higher bridge ground.

Contract bridge is a genuine science, not a mere pastime. Card distributions follow unvarying laws, not chance. Players are competent to formulate rules of procedure only to the extent of their familiarity with the laws governing card happenings and their ability to make practical use of those laws.

There are essential and non-essential features, with known dangers to be avoided, whether designing a racing yacht, a motor car or a bridge system of bid, lead and play. Only a highly trained specialist is competent to design any one of those structures. It requires a master designer to offer an improvement. Less talented designers merely palm off as real inventions new combinations of old elements, lacking additional value.

Sales talks to prospects must dwell upon the supposed merits of non-essential gadgets, to have something different from what every expert uses in common. Our greatest experts adhere to the most efficient methods known. They avidly seek newly discovered facts, making practical use of each opportunity to improve their game in any particular. It is a joy to know them, to play with them, to learn from them and to try to discover things which they want to know.

Habitual partners usually employ special minor devices to cover special holdings and situations. Without meaning to use secret conventions such variants confuse weaker opponents or casual partners, until the special meanings are explained or discovered. Such happenings are of minor importance, coming under the heading of non-essentials. What the public should know is the essentials used by experts.

Each week there will be some articles upon basic facts and experts' methods of advantageously employing them. Eventually these special articles will answer all important questions asked.

THE DEVIL'S MANSION

COPYRIGHT By REX JARDIN

CHAPTER 52

BLAIR TOOK his revolver out of his pocket and held it tightly in his hand, then stepped ahead on his tiptoes. When he had walked to the prow, he looked back for Charlie. He had not heard the boy coming after him. Yes, there he was, at his elbow. . . .

"A" . . . the letter danced in front of his eyes when he saw it, shiny brass against a white door. Janet was in there! Janet!

Blair's heart leaped, when he turned again to Charlie. "Is there another entrance?"

"Yeh, one from the saloon, and one from stateroom 'B'."

Putting his hand on the brass knob, Blair found the door to stateroom "A" from the deck locked.

"Better try the saloon."

Charlie led the way there. The saloon was dark. Taking Blair by the hand, he drew him through the room, and before Blair knew it, his hand was touching cold metal! A doorknob! This, too, would not turn. It must be locked from the inside!

"Hell! We're sailin'!" he heard Charlie hiss behind him. True, the yacht was moving.

The window on the deck! This might be open! Blair, half stumbling over a chair, turned to leave. It was getting lighter. The dawn was breaking. He could see dimly the objects in the saloon.

In a few moments the two were on deck again . . . and Blair was standing under the window of stateroom "A". It was open a crack.

Unfastening the shutters, he peered into the stateroom. Someone was lying on the bed . . . Janet! It must be Janet!

If he could get her out and down the rope while the yacht was moving slowly . . . they could get into the launch and be away . . . but if the yacht were to speed up!

He lurched against the window. The Wanderer was speeding up!

"Janet!" he called softly, so softly he hardly heard his own voice. "Janet!"

The figure on the bed rose. Janet was looking toward the window, her eyes opened wide, staring at him.

"It's I . . . Blair!" Pushing open the window, he leaped into the stateroom, and Janet was in his arms, her face pressed close to his.

He was kissing her lips, her eyes, her hair. . . .

"I've a launch outside . . . it may be dangerous . . . but we can try it. . . ."

"Who's there?" a voice demanded. Blair, his arms still around Janet, looked around. The voice seemed at his side.

Janet covered her face and started to moan.

"Who's there?" came the question again.

Blair looked bewildered at Janet. Where was the voice coming from? Her eyes met his, and then moved to the door which was just a few feet from where they were standing. The door evidently led into stateroom "B".

Gently taking his arms from the girl, Blair's fingers tightened around his revolver, and tiptoeing to the door, he flung it open and stepped in.

There was a scream and then silence. . . .

The light switch was near the door. So snapping it on, Blair looked at the thing on the floor . . . the thing that had screamed and then fallen at his feet.

Recoiling a little, he knelt for a moment. A man? Heavens!

Maurice Boisevain. . . . was this he? The love child of Morelle Boisevain, the child of Morelle and Maurice Creel?

The head of a man, yes. A head bristling with red hair like Morelle Boisevain's, except more vivid, more brilliant . . . hair such as Blair had never seen before. Coarse, almost like bristles. . . .

A head as big as his own . . . the features were not badly formed, except that the face seemed evil, horrible, the mouth twisted, the lips bluish in hue.

A face that might have been handsome if it had not carried so much hate, so much vengeance in its expression.

But the body. . . .

It could not be more than two and a half feet in height; strongly built regardless of the stature. The limbs were wiry but muscular. The small hands were clinched, the muscles of the arms knotted.

The body was clad in a red velvet robe, a robe that might have fitted a small child. Green slippers were on the feet.

He put his hand on the wrist of the dwarf at his feet.

Maurice had fallen when he had come in . . . screamed and fallen. He might have fainted.

But no, there was no pulse, nothing to indicate the man was alive, although the green eyes were open.

Hesitating a moment, Blair closed the eyes. Maurice was dead. Probably of fright, he thought. He who had been so fearless in the dark. . . .

Glancing around the room, Blair noticed a well-bound leather box, with straps for carrying. In the side were two small apertures. Perhaps this was the way Maurice had entered the boat . . . unseen by the crew. As luggage.

Perhaps this was the way he had traveled, afraid that anyone would see him. . . .

Closing the door behind him, Rodman was in stateroom "A".

"He's dead, Janet. He must have died of heart failure, when I came in."

The girl clung to Blair and put shaking arms around his neck, "Darling, it was so terrible . . ." she kept murmuring.

"We'll go now. I'll call the captain and tell him to stop." Blair gently put Janet on the bed, and reached for the phone. Yes, O'Malley was willing to stop. Glad to, if the fiend in stateroom "B" was dead, as Mr. Rodman said.

"I never really saw him in there . . . Maurice I mean," Janet was saying. "He told me I would never see him. . . . Twice I saw his face in Miss Boisevain's crystal . . . even that was terrible. . . ."

"He's dead, Janet, darling, don't worry any more. . . ."

"But, Blair, he fitted into a leather box! I nearly died when I got into the car at Miss Boisevain's, the car that took us to Vancouver. I thought I was alone at first, until I heard him talk, and discovered he was in the box. . . . I broke a string of diamonds he gave me, and threw them out. It was the only thing I could think of. Did you find them?"

"Yes, that's how I finally came here."

"And Blair, at the hotel he used to come into my room at night, after dark and talk to me. He could see better in the dark he said than in the light. But, I, I could not see him. . . .

"Here on the ship, he spent hours at night with me, sitting on that stool . . ." and she pointed to a small footstool on the floor . . . "telling me how much he loved me. He made Captain O'Malley marry us . . . in here. Maurice was in the next room, but he could throw his voice any place. That's what used to frighten me the most, because at first I thought he was right beside me. Then I realized he was not, that he only had the power of throwing his voice. . . . He used to tell me he loved me because he could not mould my mind to his.

"You see he gave me all the orders, and then was near so he could hear me repeat them. I don't know what he would have done if I had tried to escape, or disobey him. . . ."

"He's dead, dear, and the Wanderer has stopped. Shall we go?"

"Yes! But what shall we do with his things? His money? He has a trunk full of it. And all the jewels he gave me? Every night when he came in, I would find on the bed the next morning some jewel, a ring, a necklace, something."

"Rightfully they would be yours, wouldn't they?"

"No! Let's take them to Nita . . . she's stood for so much from him."

While Janet was gathering her things, Blair looked around the stateroom. It was luxuriously furnished, but the mirrors, there were many of them, were all opaque.

"Maurice painted them with something the first night. I heard him," Janet said. "He did the same thing at the hotel in Vancouver."

There was a little silence and Janet began again. "Blair, one night he read to me . . . some poems of Shelley's . . . in the hotel. It was as dark as pitch in the room. Another time he acted out a whole play for me . . . here. If I had not been so frightened I would have marveled at it. . . ."

In half an hour, Janet and Blair were in the big launch which belonged to the Wanderer, Janet's luggage and Maurice's belongings beside them. Charlie was in the small boat, waving to them happily.

"Maurice told me, Blair, that before he met me he hated everyone, even his mother, for he blamed her for all his troubles, although he did not tell me what they were. He said he did not know then what love meant. And that, through me, he would be regenerated. . . ."

Blair interposed:

"Captain O'Malley is going to take him out to sea and bury him, Janet. It's best, I think. And we're not going to lose any time getting back to New York!"

"Are you quite sure he's dead, Blair?" Janet asked as she snuggled up to him.

"Quite. Shall we be married here in Seattle now . . . as soon as we land?"

"Why . . . I guess so."

Blair kissed her upturned lips, and patted her golden hair.

THEATRES

AT THE GRAND

Alice Brady is so devoted to her dogs that she has succeeded in breaking down the Hollywood studio rule which prohibits canines "on the lot," and her Scotties and wire-haired fox terrier accompany her wherever she goes. Miss Braddy comes to the Grand Theatre on Friday in the Universal comedy, "Lady Tubbs."

AT THE CLIFTONA

"The Nitwits" vs. the masked terror, the Black Widow, is the main event at the Cliftona Theatre tonight. Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey are the contenders for the sleuthing title in this comedy bout in seven reels said to end in a knockout laugh.

Tomorrow the Cliftona will present, on their stage, the deluxe presentation, "The Merry Whirl Revue."

AT THE CIRCLE

Boris Karloff, creator of the screen roles of Frankenstein and the Mummy, dispenses even more chilling and thrilling excitement in "The Ghoul," showing Thursday and Friday at the Circle Theatre. The story, by Frank King and Leonard Hines, concerns the stealing of a remarkable jewel from a famous Egyptian tomb and the strange manner of its recovery.

STAGE SHOW AT CLIFTONA

"I haven't a kick in the world," said Chelm St. Orr, the vaudeville performer, altho he uses his feet extensively in his daily routine, both professional and private.

Mr. St. Orr, armless, appears with his brother William, and the two have played all the leading theatre circuits. Robert Ripley cartooned St. Orr in his "Believe-it-or-not" and characterized him as the "Eighth Wonder of the World," which is not hard to believe when one sees him play the trombone, trumpet, and snare drums, as well as drive nails and saw wood, swinging the hammer and saw with his feet. There is a demonstration of markmanship, hitting bulls-eyes, and one feat of hitting a piece of chalk, which his brother, William, who is on the other side of the stage, is holding in his mouth. They have been doing this act for years, and so far "Bill" has not been hit.

The brothers will be in Circleville appearing at the Cliftona Theatre as one of the feature acts with Irving M. Lewis' "Merry Whirl Revue" which plays a one day engagement tomorrow, Saturday, September 21. There are 20 people in the cast, including six vaudeville acts, a stage orchestra and a chorus of pretty girl dancers.

The latest Wheeler and Woolsey picture "The Nitwits" will also be shown as part of this extraordinary show.

Poems That Live

TEARS, IDLE TEARS

Tears, idle tears, I know not what they mean,
Tears from the depth of some divine despair
Rise in the heart, and gather to the eyes,
In looking on the happy Autumn-fields,
And thinking of the days that are no more.

Fresh as the first beam glittering on the sail,
That brings our friends up from the underworld,
Sad as the last which reddens over one
That sinks with all we love below the verge;
So sad, so fresh, the days that are no more.

Ah, sad and strange as in dark summer dawns
The earliest pipe of half-awakened birds
To dying ears, when unto dying eyes
The casement slowly grows a glimmering square;
So sad, so strange, the days that are no more.

Dear as remembered kisses after death,
And sweet as those by hopeless fancy feigned
On lips that are for others; deep as love,
Deep as first love, and wild with all regret;
O Death in Life, the days that are no more.

—Alfred, Lord Tennyson

By DREW PEARSON and ROBERT S. ALLEN

Youth Administration's Success Obscured By Personal Animosities

WASHINGTON — Some of the most worth while of New Deal projects continue to be buried under a cloud of pettifogging personal bickering. They make swell stories for the newspapers, but a poor showing for the public.

Such is the short history of the National Youth Administration. Behind the scenes, it is doing a bang-up job. But its personal animosities threaten to hide the truth.

Both amusing and tragic is the fact that the bickering hinges on such all-important things as pride, a pet project and lack of sleep.

Chief bickerers are Aubrey Williams, hard-driving, relentless chief of the Youth Administration; and John Studebaker, industrious, visionary Commissioner of Education who thought he should have been.

Originally, Studebaker helped plan the job, felt that the education of Youth should come under his bureau, groomed himself as administrator. But he made one grievous error.

In a memo to the President outlining his plans for the Youth Administration, he mentioned the CCC as something which the new project should not follow. Then he threw in a gratuitous crack at the CCC.

Naive and new in Washington, little did Studebaker realize that he had stepped upon the President's prize pet. But he knew it later. Roosevelt considers the CCC his greatest achievement, and he flatly refused to let Studebaker handle the new Youth Administration.

◈ ◈ ◈

Ambition

Studebaker is a conscientious little man, who once achieved big things by conducting a forum in Des Moines, and would like to do the same for the entire country. But when Roosevelt took away his Youth toy, he was like a small boy. He threaten to resign.

Whereupon Roosevelt handed him another toy—fulfilment of the dream of a nation-wide forum. It was to be financed from Youth Administration funds for the youth of the nation. But Studebaker was to be in charge.

He was jubilant.

It happened at this time that Aubrey Williams had been up for several nights trying to rescue veterans from the hurricane belt in Florida. He was half dead from loss of sleep.

When Studebaker announced plans for taking away a large slice of his youth money, Williams said: "Hell, no;" and the President, having given him a free hand, stood by him.

So once again Studebaker was left out in the cold.

◈ ◈ ◈

Progress

Despite this, the Youth Administration has plugged ahead. It has pretty well shunned politics. It has belied the original criticism that it would be a Democratic vote-getting proposition.

It will mail 300,000 checks to youngsters in schools and colleges during the first two weeks of October. And in contract with most New Deal projects, it is handling overhead administration on only 3 per cent of its total grant.

Chief originator and background executive of the Youth Administration is Charles Taussig, an original Brain Truster, and one of the few who learned the lesson that publicity always kills a ghost-writer. A lesson former Brain Truster, No 1, Raymon Moley, notably never learned.

The House Of Boland

Here is another near record for nepotism hung up by Congressman Patrick J. Boland, Democratic House Whip, of Scranton, Pa.:

Lenore Boland, daughter, draws a salary of $276.66 per month as secretary to the Congressman.

James Powell, Jr., Boland's nephew, draws an annual salary of $3,600 as House "pair clerk." While holding this job he plans to attend Georgetown University.

Dr. Francis Boland, son of the Congressman, is resident physician at Gallinger Hospital, supported by the Government.

Chris Boland, another son is employed during the summer months as extra clerk at the Scranton Post Office. This post is supposed to be under Civil Service, but the postmaster happens to be Boland's appointee.

John Jennings Boland, an other son, is employed with the Securities-Exchange Commission at a salary of $2,600.

NOTE — Congressman Boland's own salary is $10,000.

◈ ◈ ◈

Astor's Man Friday

Peter Grimm, real estate operator for Vincent Astor, is the man behind the serious curtailment of the Government's low cost housing and slum clearance projects.

Although Grimm is a Republican, young Henry Morgenthau brought him to Washington not only to act as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury but also to keep an eye on the Federal Housing Administration. Young Henry has been probing and pulling this apart for some time.

Grimm, a former president of the New York Real Estate Board, and founder of the New York Citizens' Budget Commission, sees out of only one eye when it comes either to government spending or government competition with private real estate.

Low cost housing is in both categories.

However, the FHA, which is merely a system of Government guaranteed loans, is not. It has been a godsend to the real estate operator and the private builder.

On the other hand, Tugwell's suburban developments and Ickes's slum clearance, both paid for 45 per cent by the Government, have offered serious competition to private business.

So Grimm swung his weight against them and for FHA.

This Invention Permits View of One's Stomach

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

THE SPECIALIST in skin diseases has always been envied by his colleagues in other departments of medicine, because the troubles he treats are out where he can see them. He should be, and is able to make an exact diagnosis in 98 per cent of his cases; those in which the physical appearance of the disease follows characteristic lines.

Dr. Clendening

The comparative disadvantage under which the internist suffers is easily appreciated. He has to say what is the matter with a liver, which is hidden from him by several layers of abdominal skin, fat and muscle, through which he can barely feel, let alone see.

But this especial advantage which the skin specialist has enjoyed is being challenged in many fields. All the exits and entrances and cul-de-sacs of the body now claim their especial tubes or periscopes, so that the dark internal caves and intimate recesses of our human fabric have yielded one by one to the same close inspection which the dermatologist enjoys with the skin.

Stomach Hard to Inspect

The stomach has been a rather difficult organ to inspect directly. True, for many years we have had a so-called gastroscope, a rigid steel tube which can be thrust in the stomach if the patient is sufficiently complacent and pliable, but the procedure is uncomfortable and unsatisfactory.

These disadvantages have been overcome by the invention of a flexible gastroscope by Dr. Rudolph Schindler, a visiting professor of medicine at the University of Chicago. This tube will bend, and hence does not make the patient as uncomfortable as examination with the stiff old-fashioned gastroscope. A series of mirrors and a light in the end make it into a flexible periscope.

Looking into the stomach with this instrument, the walls are thrown sharply into view. Every small pigment spot can be seen distinctly. The exit from the stomach at the pylorus is a scene of fascinating activity.

Seen from the inside in the living patient, it is evident that the stomach practically divides itself into two compartments by means of a circular muscle. This has never been seen before, because when the stomach is viewed during an abdominal operation, the muscle is relaxed.

Various diseases of the stomach, such as ulcer, gastritis and mucous gastritis, can be plainly seen. All of them have characteristic appearances. So has cancer of the stomach.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Six pamphlets by Dr. Clendening can now be obtained by sending 10 cents in coin for each, and a self-addressed envelope stamped with a three-cent stamp, to Dr. Logan Clendening, in care of this paper. The pamphlets are: "Indigestion and Constipation;" "Reducing and Gaining," "Infant Feeding," "Instructions for the Treatment of Diabetes," "Feminine Hygiene" and "The Care of the Hair and Skin."

TO APPROVE OFFICIALS

A move is gaining strength in the county to have a group of basketball officials approved by all coaches to work the games of the season—This means that all coaches would present their referee lists at a meeting—If any other coach objected to any man listed the official would be barred and that is that—At the end of the regular season two of the officials who have worked in the county during the year will be chosen to handle the county tournament—The move, started by the superintendents, may be a good one but there is going to be opposition from the coaches who want the right to select their own officials * * *

17 HURLERS—16 VICTORIES

How anyone is going to stop the Chicago Cubs is beyond us—Any team that uses only 17 hurlers for 16 straight victories has something—Only once during the entire winning streak has a relief pitcher been called on—Young Bill Lee, former Red Bird, won his nineteenth of the year from the Giants on Thursday, beating Carl Hubbell—Paul Derringer, incidentally, won his twentieth for the Cincinnati Reds; a year or two ago he was the champion loser of the league * * *

FEW MANAGER CHANGES

Steve O'Neill, thought to be a plug for Walter Johnson until the end of the season, has been signed to manage the Indians next year; we doubt the ability of the former star catcher to move the Indians much higher than they now are—Rogers Hornsby has been given a big contract to lead the Brownies; there's the man we'd like to see at Cleveland—Hornsby would probably die of heart failure if St. Louis would give him the type of ball player predominant on the Cleveland team—About the only manager who is not so sure next year is Stanley Harris of Washington—Cochrane, McCarthy, Cronin, Dykes, Mack are all signed up—In the National only Bill McKechnie at Boston may step out * * *

MIXED GOLFERS ENJOY BIG DAY

Johnny Mader, who is hitting about the longest ball of any had a real time on his hands Wednesday when a number of golfers of Lancaster and Washington C. H. invaded the local course.

Mader was paired with Allen Stewart, son of the Lancaster professional, and a mighty golfer off the tee. The local youth, a protege of Pro Emil Hrobon, was consistently farther than Stewart and played him even on the 18 holes each scoring 76.

In a best-ball match between the younger Stewart and his father, Ralph, against Mader and Hrobon, the Lancaster pair won 3 up and 2 to go with 36-34 — 70 against 36-36—72.

Other golfers who took part in the day's activities were J. E. Kuhns, John Browning, Roy Francis, C. D. Kraft, Dr. O. W. House, Roy Brown, L. J. Althafer, Joe Wyman, N. E. Reichelderfer, H. Bartholomew, A. L. Wilder and J. Eoff.

In a blind bogey tournament, Browning, a Washington C. H. golfer, hit the bogey of 78 with 46-40, 86-8, 78, and Roy Brown of Lancaster scored 44-46, 90-12, 78.

Mader was runner-up with 39-37, 76-2, 74.

Thursday's 4-stroke remorse (your opponent made you replay four of your good shots) was won by George Meyers.

Blackwell's Island

Blackwell's island is in East river and belongs to New York city. It has an area of about 120 acres, and contains the penitentiary, almshouse, lunatic asylum for women, workhouse, blind asylum, hospital for incurables and a convalescent hospital. Nearly all these buildings were erected from granite quarried on the island, by convict labor, the style of architecture being of a turreted and battlemented design of the feudal character. The island is bordered by a heavy granite sea wall, also built by the convicts, and a large amount of farming and gardening is carried on by the inmates of the penitentiary.

XAVIER TO START GRIDIRON SEASON

COLUMBUS, Sept. 20—The lid of the 1935 Ohio intercollegiate football season will be lifted tonight at Cincinnati where Xavier University's Musketeers will engage the Georgetown, Ky., College Tigers under the lights.

The contest is the only collegiate game carded for the weekend, most elevens being scheduled to inaugurate the fall campaign next week-end.

Four Ohio elevens have two weeks yet to prepare for their season openers Oct. 5 Ohio State, Bowling Green, Oberlin and Ohio Northern are the late starters.

All of the Buckeye A. A. teams, Cincinnati, Ohio University, Ohio Wesleyan, Miami, Marshall, and Dayton will start their campaigns Sept. 28.

TICKET SALES ARE BOOMING FOR 2 GAMES

Taylor Warns Supply for Notre Dame and Illinois to Be Exhausted

COLUMBUS, Sept.20 A warning was issued today to gridiron fans by Henry D. Taylor, ticket director at Ohio State University "While we still have plenty of seats left for both the Notre Dame and Illinois games," Taylor said, "I believe the supply will be sold within the next two weeks. I would advise anyone who wants to see either of these games to get his application in at once."

Taylor said the sale of tickets this year was more brisk than at any time since the boom days of football back in the early 20's. "It seems like everyone is anxious to see the games this year," he said, "especially the Notre Dame and Illinois contests."

Others Strong

However, the sale for Northwestern is right now running Illinois a close race while indications are that the Kentucky and Drake games will equal or better previous opening game attendance mark.

Accommodations for 40,000 high school students of the Ohio being made by officials of the Ohio State university for the third annual high school day on the campus Oct. 5. Last year 34,000 pupils were in attendance.

B. L. Stradley, university examiner, is in charge of the program. This will include educational tours of the campus, scientific experiments, demonstrations in various buildings, and other events.

The program will reach its climax in the afternoon when a varsity football game between Ohio State and the University of Kentucky will be played on the stadium field. This game is expected to be the hardest opening game that an Ohio State team has faced in several years.

FISCH MAY WIN FULLBACK BERTH

COLUMBUS, Sept. 20 — The battle for Ohio State's fullback post today was at a boiling point with Frank Fisch, Mansfield husky, definitely added to the list of aspirants seeking the post which Buzz Wetzel's graduation left open.

Coach Francis Schmidt devoted much of his time to tutoring the former quarterback on fullback duties. In addition to Fisch, who at present looms No. 1 candidate for the job, Frank Antennucci, Niles; Johnny Kabealo, Youngstown; Vic Dorris, Bellaire; and Jim McDonald of Springfield are waging a heated battle to fill the vacancy.

The Buckeyes went through two short sessions yesterday featured by a brief offense period and a tag scrimmage which found the varsity on the defense against anticipated Kentucky plays employed by a second team.

A few of the Scarlet coaches were expected to leave for Lexington, Ky., to watch Kentucky in its initial effort of the season against Maryville tomorrow. The Kentuckians are first on the Buckeyes' schedule this fall.

Curiosity of a Boundary

North of the forty-ninth parallel and separated from the main part of Minnesota by the Lake of the Woods is a land area of nearly 124 square miles, including a number of small mountains, which became United States territory by treaties of 1783 and 1818. The inclusion of this area in the United States resulted from the use of inaccurate maps by the treaty makers, and has been described as a "political geographical curiosity of a boundary."

Tiger 11 Average 149 Pounds

The football team Coach Jack Landrum expected to put on the field this afternoon against Groveport averaged a fraction over 149 pounds.

The biggest men on the field were Red Ruff, tackle, and John Griffith, expected to get the call at fullback. Dick Meason was expected to start at the other tackle but the position also was available to Gay Conrad and Russ Weaver. The latter is the heavies man on the squad, 183.

Won Last in 1932

Quite a while before game time, Tiger enthusiasts were treking toward the football field. The game was scheduled to start at 3 p. m. with the Red and Black, without a victory since the 1932 season beating Marysville 13-12 at that time conceded a fair chance to win.

Many took part in a pep meet and snake dance Thursday evening with the band having a big part in the celebration. Teachers and students alike joined the parade in the middle of the city.

Coach Landrum, faced with the task of making a football combination out of a bunch of green but willing kids, worked his squad on kick-off plays and signal practice Thursday evening. There was no scrimmage and all the boys left the field in good shape.

Griffith, Melson, Good, Jackson and Adkins, all banged up somewhat, are now ready for the first whistle.

Boys in Condition

No one is more enthusiastic about their chances than the squad. The boys have been drilling from 3:15 until 6 and 6:30 since the season started and are in splendid physical condition. If they lose, it will be because Groveport is the better team.

Landrum's starting lineup was expected to be:

Ends, Jackson and Fickardt.
Tackles, Ruff and Melson.
Guards, Garner and Adkins.
Center, McGinnis.
Quarterback, Friley.
Halfbacks, Henry and Rader.
Fullback, Griffith.
The officials were:
Carlisle, Ohio Wesleyan, referee; Burghalter, Heidelberg, umpire; Boyd, Ohio U., head linesman.

BABE RISKO WINS "MIDDLE" TITLE

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 20—Eddie "Babe" Risko, handsome ex-sailor of Syracuse, N. Y., was the new middleweight champion of the world today.

He took the title from a game but crippled Teddy Yarosz in a fast fifteen round fight here last night.

Risko, favored by practically the same circumstances that prevailed in that upsetting New Year's day exhibition at Scranton when Yarosz injured his knee in going down to defeat, hammered the Pittsburger to the floor three times in capturing the 160-pound crown.

Ted, after edging his way into an early lead by a wily two-handed offense that reminded the crowd of his winning style of past months when he was disposing of all-comers, slowed down considerably after being dropped in the fourth round by a swinging overhand right from the challenger.

CHICAGO SETS SEASON MARK; LEE IS VICTOR

Giants Drop Seven and Half Games Back; Dizzy Returns to Winning Form

NEW YORK, Sept. 20 — Although the Chicago Cubs today are quoted as favorites to cop the National league pennant, it is also conceded the five game series with the St. Louis Cardinals will make or break their banner aspirations.

On the basis of 1934 season form, it looks like the Cards in this series for they have taken 12 and lost only five to the Bruins. But who can tell now, that the series will be played on season form.

In the Cubs' favor stands the longest winning streak of the major leagues this season; the longest stretch of victories set by a Chicago team; and the fact that the Cubs played through the recent invasion of the eastern clubs, without dropping a single game.

Terrymen Easy

When the Cubs blasted the hopes of the Giants by making it four straight, they were playing to form. By taking 11 of the last 12 settos with the Terrymen, the Cubs wound up the season series 14 to 8 in their favor.

The thundering Cubs, in winning their 16th straight, and the fourth in succession over Giants, again batted their way to a 6 to 1 decision, shoving the New Yorkers seven and a half games from the top. In this respect they join their fellow townsmen, the Yankees who also are seven and a half games behind Detroit.

More than 30,000, saw Bill Lee register his 19th win of the campaign as he yielded only six hits, while his mates hammered Carl Hubbell and Allyn Stout for 13 safeties.

The Cubs have only seven to play, while the Cards have ten, obviously the chips will be down when they clash.

Retain Their Pace

The Cardinals continued their march through the hapless Brooklyn Dodgers by defeating them 5 to 1. Dizzy Dean again toiled on the mound, and limited the Books to nine hits, while the Cards teed off for 13 hits off Benge and Baker. The Dodgers wound up the series two and half games behind the rollicking Cubs. Each team contributed three errors. Dizzy hung up his 37th win of the season.

TO APPROVE OFFICIALS

A move is gaining strength in the county to have a group of basketball officials approved by all coaches to work the games of the season—This means that all coaches would present their referee lists at a meeting—If any other coach objected to any man listed the official would be barred and that is that—At the end of the regular season two of the officials who have worked in the county during the year will be chosen to handle the county tournament—The move, started by the superintendents, may be a good one but there is going to be opposition from the coaches who want the right to select their own officials * * *

17 HURLERS—16 VICTORIES

How anyone is going to stop the Chicago Cubs is beyond us—Any team that uses only 17 hurlers for 16 straight victories has something—Only once during the entire winning streak has a relief pitcher been called on—Young Bill Lee, former Red Bird, won his nineteenth of the year from the Giants on Thursday, beating Carl Hubbell—Paul Derringer, incidentally, won his twentieth for the Cincinnati Reds; a year or two ago he was the champion loser of the league * * *

FEW MANAGER CHANGES

Steve O'Neill, thought to be a plug for Walter Johnson until the end of the season, has been signed to manage the Indians next year; we doubt the ability of the former star catcher to move the Indians much higher than they now are—Rogers Hornsby has been given a big contract to lead the Brownies; there's the man we'd like to see at Cleveland—Hornsby would probably die of heart failure if St. Louis would give him the type of ball player predominant on the Cleveland team—About the only manager who is not so sure next year is Stanley Harris of Washington—Cochrane, McCarthy, Cronin, Dykes, Mack are all signed up—In the National only Bill McKechnie at Boston may step out * * *

MIXED GOLFERS ENJOY BIG DAY

Johnny Mader, who is hitting about the longest ball of any had a real time on his hands Wednesday when a number of golfers of Lancaster and Washington C. H. invaded the local course.

Mader was paired with Allen Stewart, son of the Lancaster professional, and a mighty golfer off the tee. The local youth, a protege of Pro Emil Hrobon, was consistently farther than Stewart and played him even on the 18 holes each scoring 76.

In a best-ball match between the younger Stewart and his father, Ralph, against Mader and Hrobon, the Lancaster pair won 3 up and 2 to go with 36-34 — 70 against 36-36—72.

Other golfers who took part in the day's activities were J. E. Kuhns, John Browning, Roy Francis, C. D. Kraft, Dr. O. W. House, Roy Brown, L. J. Althafer, Joe Wyman, N. E. Reichelderfer, H. Bartholomew, A. L. Wilder and J. Eoff.

In a blind bogey tournament, Browning, a Washington C. H. golfer, hit the bogey of 78 with 46-40, 86-8, 78, and Roy Brown of Lancaster scored 44-46, 90-12, 78.

Mader was runner-up with 39-37, 76-2, 74.

Thursday's 4-stroke remorse (your opponent made you replay four of your good shots) was won by George Meyers.

Blackwell's Island

Blackwell's island is in East river and belongs to New York city. It has an area of about 120 acres, and contains the penitentiary, almshouse, lunatic asylum for women, workhouse, blind asylum, hospital for incurables and a convalescent hospital. Nearly all these buildings were erected from granite quarried on the island, by convict labor, the style of architecture being of a turreted and battlemented design of the feudal character. The island is bordered by a heavy granite sea wall, also built by the convicts, and a large amount of farming and gardening is carried on by the inmates of the penitentiary.

TICKET SALES ARE BOOMING FOR 2 GAMES

Taylor Warns Supply for Notre Dame and Illinois to Be Exhausted

COLUMBUS, Sept.20—A warning was issued today to gridiron fans by Henry D. Taylor, ticket director at Ohio State University "While we still have plenty of seats left for both the Notre Dame and Illinois games," Taylor said, "I believe the supply will be sold within the next two weeks. I would advise anyone who wants to see either of these games to get his application in at once."

Taylor said the sale of tickets this year was more brisk than at any time since the boom days of football back in the early 20's. "It seems like everyone is anxious to see the games this year," he said, "especially the Notre Dame and Illinois contests."

Others Strong

However, the sale for Northwestern is right now running Illinois a close race while indications are that the Kentucky and Drake games will equal or better previous opening game attendance mark.

Accommodations for 40,000 high school students of the Ohio being made by officials of the Ohio State university for the third annual high school day on the campus Oct. 5. Last year 34,000 pupils were in attendance.

B. L. Stradley, university examiner, is in charge of the program. This will include educational tours of the campus, scientific experiments, demonstrations in various buildings, and other events.

The program will reach its climax in the afternoon when a varsity football game between Ohio State and the University of Kentucky will be played on the stadium field. This game is expected to be the hardest opening game that an Ohio State team has faced in several years.

FISCH MAY WIN FULLBACK BERTH

COLUMBUS, Sept. 20 — The battle for Ohio State's fullback post today was at a boiling point with Frank Fisch, Mansfield husky, definitely added to the list of aspirants seeking the post which Buzz Wetzel's graduation left open.

Coach Francis Schmidt devoted much of his time to tutoring the former quarterback on fullback duties. In addition to Fisch, who at present looms No. 1 candidate for the job, Frank Antennucci, Niles; Johnny Kabealo, Youngstown; Vic Dorris, Bellaire; and Jim McDonald of Springfield are waging a heated battle to fill the vacancy.

The Buckeyes went through two short sessions yesterday featured by a brief offense period and a tag scrimmage which found the varsity on the defense against anticipated Kentucky plays employed by a second team.

A few of the Scarlet coaches were expected to leave for Lexington, Ky., to watch Kentucky in its initial effort of the season against Maryville tomorrow. The Kentuckians are first on the Buckeyes' schedule this fall.

Curiosity of a Boundary

North of the forty-ninth parallel and separated from the main part of Minnesota by the Lake of the Woods is a land area of nearly 124 square miles, including a number of small mountains, which became United States territory by treaties of 1783 and 1818. The inclusion of this area in the United States resulted from the use of inaccurate maps by the treaty makers, and has been described as a "politico-geographical curiosity of a boundary."

The funds raised from the bonds ould be sufficient to provide od and shelter for the needy fter the federal government eases the dole in Ohio. The bonds ould be retired by a special efinite tax that would be specically stated in the issue as preented to the voters.

Meantime, the House Finance ill and prepared to vote the overnor's appropriation transfer ommittee, wrestled with the easure out for consideration of he house today. The bill seeks to void the necessity of passing a ew appropriation bill, by transerring salary reductions to items hich the governor vetoed last pring and which are essential to he running of many departments nd institutions. Opposition to this easure developed with a bank in he House when the bill was read, epublican members charging hat the Governor was seeking to make damn fools out of the mem-ers of the Legislature." Observrs predicted that the bill would ail when it came up for a vote.

Opposition likewise has grown y leaps and bounds to the $20,-00,000 PWA building program, or which the Legislature is asked o appropriate $3,000,000 to enable he state to participate in the proosal. Fearful of the constitutionlity of the entire program, and nwilling to burden the state with new debt at this time, many of he solons privately and some opnly declared that they would vote gainst the measure.

The Senate appointed a committee, headed by William D. Zoul, D) Cleveland, to hold public earings on the question. First earings will start next Tuesday.

Study Tax Plan

Committees to study a tax proram, work out conformity of the hio old age pension law with the ederal security act, and a subommittee on the sales tax, also vere appointed.

Following the Governor's signng of the bill appropriating $4,-00,000 of liquor profits to the old ge pension funds, Ray Allison, inance director, transferred $2,-00,000 to the pension funds and hecks for August awards, which ad not been met, were mailed by he state auditor.

Additional transfers will be nade during the balance of the year, insuring payments of pensions to recipients for the remainder of 1935.

The Romance Racket

By MARIE BLIZARD

CHAPTER 1

THE HANDS that held the pearls were waxen and trembled with ague. Their touch sent a chill through Carol Kennedy as she half turned and leaned forward to have them clasped about her slim white throat.

Straightening, she touched them briefly as though to feel their beauty. The touch of their cool smoothness on her fingertips brought a light for an instant to her eyes.

Aunt Helen began to speak. Cynthia dropped her hand to her lap.

"Matilde's pearls! Howard, how generous of you to give them to Carol. Quite a gift, my dear, for a girl on her twenty-fourth birthday. What have you to say to your Uncle Howard, my dear?"

"Suppose I stand up and tell him what I think of all of you and his pearls," Carol thought grimly. "Or, perhaps, I'm expected to make a little courtesy and kiss him on his yellow old brow."

For a moment she couldn't speak. Her hands crept toward her throat. The pearls seemed to be coiled about it. More gifts, more bonds forging her to The Family! Slowly she looked at each of them in turn. The aunts and cousins sitting around the lavish table in the great dining room of the old house where even the candle-lights dared not dance in shadows on the walls.

So this was her birthday dinner, was it? Well, she knew they had come not to do her honor but to lay down the rules of her life for another year. They'd done it now ever since her mother had died. However, this was the important year! Her vast fortune becomes entirely hers with this birthday. What would they have to say about that, she wondered. Plenty!

Uncle Howard was waiting to be thanked for the pearls! Or was he? Carol smiled at him dutifully and saw no answer in the sardonic grin on his parched face. What enjoyment did he get out of giving her the pearls that belonged on the throat of a woman as soft and beautiful as Matilde had been? Carol was neither soft nor beautiful. She was a plain girl and suddenly the truth of it stabbed through her heart.

"Well, Carol, has the cat got your tongue?" Uncle Fred tried a light touch.

"Oh! Oh, no, of course not, I mean . . . well, I mean. . . . I hadn't expected such a beautiful gift. Thank you, Uncle Howard"—and turning to the rest:

"And thank you all for this birthday party."

"It's nearly over, Cousin Carol. I know you won't mind if Owen and I leave. We've promised to show up at the Meacham's party tonight."

Carol felt disappointment sweep over her like a child when told that the party is over. She said:

"Of course not, Kathy. It was awfully nice of you to come and thank you for your gift . . . and thank you, Dr. Craig, for the flowers."

For a moment Carol's eyes fixed on the stern dark face of her cousin's fiance lit now with kindness as he bowed over her hand.

"The pearls are very becoming to you, Carol. They add to the air of regality about you tonight with your hair coiled in braids like a crown. I hope this year will bring you many happy things," he said with deep resonance that brought a flush of pleasure to her plain face.

"Don't be afraid to use that little lipstick, dear." You'll find it will help enormously," Kathy said, gathering cigaret case, vanity and gold-mesh bag together creating a little flurry in the midst of the family that admired but did not approve of her.

Soon she was gone and what little sparkle had lighted that dull dinner party left with her vivid red-clad figure.

"Now, I'm in for it," Carol thought and sat back in the shadows of her chair.

Uncle George cleared his throat.

In that moment Carol Kennedy became a new girl.

His wife, Aunt Helen, glanced at the others quickly and warningly for silence. Aunt Grace folded her napkin and waited. Uncle Fred resigned himself to listening. Cousin Martha sipped her wine.

Uncle Howard, the ancient one, studied the stem of his brandy glass and looked back into his memories: there was nothing anyone in his family could say to interest him.

The silvery chimes of the clock sounded the hour of 11 before Uncle George began:

"Carol, you know this is the most important of your birthdays and . . ."

"Yes, my dear, and we, your family, are worried about you . . ." Aunt Helen interrupted her husband.

He fastened a reproving glance upon her and continued, "Worried isn't exactly the word. You are alone in the world—except for us, of course—and faced with the responsibility of your wealth. You are, it is true, not a child but you are unmarried and we feel that we should take a more pronounced part in advising and guiding your welfare."

Carol wondered if he meant ordering the groceries or selecting her reading material.

"As a matter of fact, Fred and I have a proposal to make to Carol." It was Aunt Grace speaking. "I am frank to admit that I haven't done my duty by my favorite niece"—she didn't notice the slight lift of Carol's eyebrows—"although I did so want to give you a coming-out party—you know, Carol, you wouldn't hear of it—and now that Kathy is going to be married Fred and I would like to have you close up that big house of yours and come to live with us as our daughter."

It wasn't often Second Cousin Martha contributed her opinion. It wasn't often it was welcome. Now, gathering her courage and making nervous little gestures at the velvet band on her withered throat, she ventured:

"I thought perhaps I might offer to go and live with Carol. In that great house she must be very lonesome."

Uncle Howard ceased his contemplation of the dregs in his glass. "Splendid, my dear. You and Carol would be great company for each other."

A slow flush rose in Carol's cheek. Anger—how odd the word seemed to her—rose in her throat. Carol was finding new emotions within her this night. So Uncle Howard thought Cousin Martha who reeked of mothballs would be good company for her!

A desperate longing for escape, from them all, from this room, from herself, rose within her. She who had been so mild, so amenable, so pliant to their wishes all their life, longed for words to startle them into silence, to leave them aghast!

Steadily she brought her head about to face Uncle Howard. How strange his eyes were! The mocking had gone. They were like black beads in his parched face yet they seemed to be sending a message to her. They seemed to be saying, "Courage! Spirit! Have you none?"

And looking back at him, she saw another younger pair of eyes, dark and kindly, bent over her own hand.

In that moment Carol Kennedy became a new girl. Inwardly she trembled but unconsciously she straightened her shoulders and addressed them all:

"It is, as always, most kind of you, to want to help me. But I've plans of my own. I've . . ."—she was a little breathless—"I'm tired of being the ugly duckling of this family. . . . I'm . . . well . . . you'll see. . . . I'm giving my house to Uncle George and Aunt Helen. That's what you want, isn't it?"

The candles sputtered—as they all would later.

"What Aunt Grace wants is a trip around the world at my expense. You may have it, Aunt Grace, and take Cousin Martha along for company.

"I'd appreciate it if one of you will take Nanny and the servants. They won't be able to stand the kind of life I am planning." She paused and looked at them brightly.

"I'm taking an apartment in New York. I've work to do and . . . and cocktail parties to give . . . and life do you all understand—life to learn about! I mean to do it!"

In the speechless silence that followed, she turned wordlessly to Uncle Howard. "You'll help me," her glance seemed to say.

"You won't need help," his glance answered her.

There was the merest hint of cooperation in the slight nod she gave them all as she rose and walked gallantly from the room.

OHIO COUNTIES TO BALLOT ON RELIEF MONEY?

May Decide State's Appropriation for Needy for Next Two Years

COLUMBUS, Sept. 20— Voters in Pickaway-co, as well as all over Ohio, may be asked to decide at the Novemb.r elections, whether $40,000,000 in bonds to take care of Ohio relief needs for the next two years are to be issued.

Unable to work out a satisfactory program, and besieged by relief oranizations, headed by Marc Grossman of Cleveland, the Governor today tossed in the legislative hopper a proposal that the solons pass a resolution to submit the issue to voters at the next regular election.

"It is not my proposal," the Governor declared in no uncertain terms, in informing the legislators that the citizens of the state should be given the privilege of deciding this immense question.

Care for Needy

The funds raised from the bonds would be sufficient to provide food and shelter for the needy after the federal government ceases the dole in Ohio. The bonds would be retired by a special definite tax that would be specifically stated in the issue as presented to the voters.

Meantime, the House Finance bill and prepared to vote the Governor's appropriation transfer Committee, wrestled with the measure out for consideration of the house today. The bill seeks to avoid the necessity of passing a new appropriation bill, by transferring salary reductions to items which the governor vetoed last spring and which are essential to the running of many departments and institutions. Opposition to this measure developed with a bank in the House when the bill was read, Republican members charging that the Governor was seeking to "make damn fools out of the members of the Legislature." Observers predicted that the bill would fail when it came up for a vote.

Opposition likewise has grown by leaps and bounds to the $20,000,000 PWA building program, for which the Legislature is asked to appropriate $3,000,000 to enable the state to participate in the proposal. Fearful of the constitutionality of the entire program, and unwilling to burden the state with a new debt at this time, many of the solons privately and some openly declared that they would vote against the measure.

The Senate appointed a committee, headed by William D. Zoul, (D) Cleveland, to hold public hearings on the question. First hearings will start next Tuesday.

Study Tax Plan

Committees to study a tax program, work out conformity of the Ohio old age pension law with the federal security act, and a subcommittee on the sales tax, also were appointed.

Following the Governor's signing of the bill appropriating $4,500,000 of liquor profits to the old age pension funds, Ray Allison, finance director, transferred $2,500,000 to the pension funds and checks for August awards, which had not been met, were mailed by the state auditor.

Additional transfers will be made during the balance of the year, insuring payments of pensions to recipients for the remainder of 1935.

CHAPTER 1

THE HANDS that held the pearls were waxen and trembled with ague. Their touch sent a chill through Carol Kennedy as she half turned and leaned forward to have them clasped about her slim white throat.

Straightening, she touched them briefly as though to feel their beauty. The touch of their cool smoothness on her fingertips brought a light for an instant to her eyes.

Aunt Helen began to speak. Cynthia dropped her hand to her lap.

"Matilde's pearls! Howard, how generous of you to give them to Carol. Quite a gift, my dear, for a girl on her twenty-fourth birthday. What have you to say to your Uncle Howard, my dear?"

"Suppose I stand up and tell him what I think of all of you and his pearls," Carol thought grimly. "Or, perhaps, I'm expected to make a little courtesy and kiss him on his yellow old brow."

For a moment she couldn't speak. Her hands crept toward her throat. The pearls seemed to be coiled about it. More gifts, more bonds forging her to The Family! Slowly she looked at each of them in turn. The aunts and cousins sitting around the lavish table in the great dining room of the old house where even the candle-lights dared not dance in shadows on the walls.

So this was her birthday dinner, was it? Well, she knew they had come not to do her honor but to lay down the rules of her life for another year. They'd done it now ever since her mother had died. However, this was the important year! Her vast fortune becomes entirely hers with this birthday. What would they have to say about that, she wondered. Plenty!

Uncle Howard was waiting to be thanked for the pearls! Or was he? Carol smiled at him dutifully and saw no answer in the sardonic grin on his parched face. What enjoyment did he get out of giving her the pearls that belonged on the throat of a woman as soft and beautiful as Matilde had been? Carol was neither soft nor beautiful. She was a plain girl and suddenly the truth of it stabbed through her heart.

"Well, Carol, has the cat got your tongue?" Uncle Fred tried a light touch.

"Oh! Oh, no, of course not, I mean . . . well, I mean. . . . I hadn't expected such a beautiful gift. Thank you, Uncle Howard"—and turning to the rest:

"And thank you all for this birthday party."

"It's nearly over, Cousin Carol. I know you won't mind if Owen and I leave. We've promised to show up at the Meacham's party tonight."

Carol felt disappointment sweep over her like a child when told that the party is over. She said:

"Of course not, Kathy. It was awfully nice of you to come and thank you for your gift . . . and thank you, Dr. Craig, for the flowers."

For a moment Carol's eyes fixed on the stern dark face of her cousin's fiance lit now with kindness as he bowed over her hand.

"The pearls are very becoming to you, Carol. They add to the air of regality about you tonight with your hair coiled in braids like a crown. I hope this year will bring you many happy things," he said with deep resonance that brought a flush of pleasure to her plain face.

"Don't be afraid to use that little lipstick, dear." You'll find it will help enormously," Kathy said, gathering cigaret case, vanity and gold-mesh bag together creating a little flurry in the midst of the family that admired but did not approve of her.

Soon she was gone and what little sparkle had lighted that dull dinner party left with her vivid red-clad figure.

"Now, I'm in for it," Carol thought and sat back in the shadows of her chair.

Uncle George cleared his throat.

In that moment Carol Kennedy became a new girl.

His wife, Aunt Helen, glanced at the others quickly and warningly for silence. Aunt Grace folded her napkin and waited. Uncle Fred resigned himself to listening. Cousin Martha sipped her wine.

Uncle Howard, the ancient one, studied the stem of his brandy glass and looked back into his memories; there was nothing anyone in his family could say to interest him.

The silvery chimes of the clock sounded the hour of 11 before Uncle George began:

"Carol, you know this is the most important of your birthdays and . . ."

"Yes, my dear, and we, your family, are worried about you . . ." Aunt Helen interrupted her husband.

He fastened a reproving glance upon her and continued, "Worried isn't exactly the word. You are alone in the world—except for us, of course—and faced with the responsibility of your wealth. You are, it is true, not a child but you are unmarried and we feel that we should take a more pronounced part in advising and guiding your welfare."

Carol wondered if he meant ordering the groceries or selecting her reading material.

"As a matter of fact, Fred and I have a proposal to make to Carol." It was Aunt Grace speaking, "I am frank to admit that I haven't done my duty by my favorite niece"—she didn't notice the slight lift of Carol's eyebrows—"although I did so want to give you a coming-out party—you know, Carol, you wouldn't hear of it—and now that Kathy is going to be married Fred and I would like to have you close up that big house of yours and come to live with us as our daughter."

It wasn't often Second Cousin Martha contributed her opinion. It wasn't often it was welcome. Now, gathering her courage and making nervous little gestures at the velvet band on her withered throat, she ventured:

"I thought perhaps I might offer to go and live with Carol. In that great house she must be very lonesome."

Uncle Howard ceased his contemplation of the dregs in his glass. "Splendid, my dear. You and Carol would be great company for each other."

A slow flush rose in Carol's cheek. Anger—how odd the word seemed to her—rose in her throat. Carol was finding new emotions within her this night. So Uncle Howard thought Cousin Martha who reeked of mothballs would be good company for her!

A desperate longing for escape, from them all, from this room, from herself, rose within her. She who had been so mild, so amenable, so pliant to their wishes all their life, longed for words to startle them into silence, to leave them aghast!

Steadily she brought her head about to face Uncle Howard. How strange his eyes were! The mocking had gone. They were like black beads in his parched face yet they seemed to be sending a message to her. They seemed to be saying, "Courage! Spirit! Have you none?"

And looking back at him, she saw another younger pair of eyes, dark and kindly, bent over her own hand.

In that moment Carol Kennedy became a new girl. Inwardly she trembled but unconsciously she straightened her shoulders and addressed them all:

"It is, as always, most kind of you, to want to help me. But I've plans of my own. I've . . ."—she was a little breathless—"I'm tired of being the ugly duckling of this family. . . . I'm . . . well . . . you'll see. . . . I'm giving my house to Uncle George and Aunt Helen. That's what you want, isn't it?"

The candles sputtered—as they all would later.

"What Aunt Grace wants is a trip around the world at my expense. You may have it, Aunt Grace, and take Cousin Martha along for company.

"I'd appreciate it if one of you will take Nanny and the servants. They won't be able to stand the kind of life I am planning." She paused and looked at them brightly.

"I'm taking an apartment in New York. I've work to do and . . . and cocktail parties to give . . . and life—do you all understand—life to learn about! I mean to do it!"

In the speechless silence that followed, she turned wordlessly to Uncle Howard. "You'll help me," her glance seemed to say.

"You won't need help," his glance answered her.

There was the merest hint of desperation in the slight nod she gave them all as she rose and walked gallantly from the room.

Gray Duck Is Attractive

Although inconspicuous from a distance, the gadwell, or gray duck is attractive at close range. It is found in both the Old world and North America where it is most numerous in the Great Plains area.

Women's Blood Preferred

Women blood donors are preferred in hospitals in Canada because their blood clots more easily than that of men. This is considered a vital aspect in the transfusion of blood.

GINGHER PUT ON NEW COMMITTEE

COLUMBUS, Sept. 20—Senator Paul R. Gingher (R) representing the district including Pickaway-co, today had been named as a member of the new Welfare Institutions committee, scheduled to hold hearings on the Governor's $70,000,000 building program.

The committee was named at a skeleton session of the Senate yesterday and will have as its chief function the preparation of legislation to enable the state to participate in the PWA program to construct new welfare buildings and repair old institutions.

Chairman of the committee, Senator William Zoul, (D) Cuyahoga, said the state was badly in need of new hospitals and institutions for the mentally sick and "we can't pass the buck any longer."

However, the constitutionality of the program has been seriously questioned by members of the committee and of the Legislature. Unless there is an about face in sentiment, the entire program faces defeat in the House and possibly in the Senate as well.

on High to Washington, south on Washington to Ohio, west on Ohio to Court and out N. Court-st to Rosewood-ave.

The officers reported they were traveling between 70 and 75 miles an hour after the car on Court-st and on three occasions the sedan tried to pocket the police cruiser and wreck it against the curb. Officer Shasteen said he fired two shots at the rear wheel of the car going out N. Court-st, one near Nelson's service station and the other when the cars were in front of the residence of Frank Goff, county juvenile officer. Three shots were fired at the car on Rosewood-ave.

Two bullets struck the auto's body near the right rear fender, and a third struck the left rear fender near the running board, a few inches from the tire. One spent bullet hit the right front seat and the other lodged in the rear cushion. One spring in the rear seat cushion was partially torn out by the slug.

Officers were unable to find traces of the other two bullets on the car.

At the end of Rosewood-ave the car was driven up the N. & W railroad embankment. Hairston jumped from the car as it started up the embankment, officers said, and was thrown head over heels, landing in a clump of elders. The other occupant jumped from the car when it neared the top of the embankment and ran across the railroad tracks, and escaped. The car rolled back down the hill and stopped over Hairston but did not injure him. The officers said he crawled from under the running board.

Hairston told officers he bought the liquor 'down in the hills" for $1.50 a gallon and when the officers started chasing him he believed they were hijackers.
